More Snow Slated

Bootheel residents will get a new cover of snow tonight and much colder temperatures Saturday if U.S. weather bureau forecasts are borne out. Two to four inches of snow are predicted ahead of clearing skies and temperatures of five to 10 degrees tonight.

A travelers warning accompanying sleet and ice-covered roads this morning is being continued as accumulations of snow continue to make conditions hazardous for motorists.

Much of the two inches of snow accumulated last weekend remained on the ground today.

A fresh wave of cold air swept across Missouri today and promised to keep things frozen over the weekend.

The Weather Bureau predicted low temperatures tonight as cold as 20 below zero along with intermittent snow which could accumulate to as much as four inches in some areas.

Biting northwest winds up to 30 miles an hour added to the uncomfortable conditions. Most of Missouri may not see any readings above the low 20s Sunday.

Driving conditions were described as treacherous, varying between dry pavement and a mixture of ice and snow.

It hit a low of 5 above early today in Kirksville and St. Joseph but dropped only to 32 in Springfield before the cold front arrived. High marks ranged Friday from 29 in St. Joseph to 29 in Springfield and Columbia.

Funeral Home Refuses Extra For Servicemen

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A St. Charles funeral director who feels an obligation to his country provides one of the few places where servicemen killed in Vietnam can be buried at a cost within the government allowance.

Arthur C. Baue, owner of the Baue Funeral Home, said he was too old to be drafted during World War II and says his son was about to be drafted when the war ended.

An Associated Press survey indicated that government funeral allowances fall short of covering costs of burying servicemen in many sections of the country.

The allowance is $150 if the body is transported to a civilian funeral establishment or church with a military burial later, and $300 if both funeral and burial are to be civilian.

Families interviewed recently reported funerals for their sons and husbands cost from $300 to $700 more than the government provides.

James G. Austin of the Baue mortuary said his employer, "doesn't take one red cent from the family to bury a hero of the Vietnam situation. We do it for free."

However, Austin added, cemetery costs must be paid for by the family and if the family prefers a vault, that too, is extra.

Crop Values Dip Slightly

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Missouri farmers produced crops last year valued at about $647 million or 8 per cent less than the 1966 total, it was reported today.

Federal and state agriculture experts pegged value of corn for grain at nearly $224 million, a decline of about $13 million from the previous year.

Value of soybeans raised for beans was estimated at $182 million or a drop of some $48 million.

Experts figured Missouri's 1967 wheat crop was valued at about $73 million, a gain of some $4 million. The hay crop last year was valued at $118 million or about $12 million more than in 1966.

U.S. Air Losses Surpass 1,000 Planes

SAIGON (AP) — Communist troopers overran a village six miles from the big U.S. air base at Bien Hoa today and held it for five hours in an attempt to score a propaganda victory. The U.S. Command reported the loss of four more jets over North Vietnam, boosting the number of combat losses in the war to more than 1,000 aircraft.

U.S. forces drove the enemy out of the village of Tan Uyen, 23 miles north of Saigon, at the break of dawn but the Communists had burned down 11 homes, killed six civilians and eight government soldiers. Eleven civilians and 35 soldiers were wounded. Counterattacking forces killed 19 Communists.

One wounded Red prisoner told U.S. interrogators the attacking force was a North Vietnamese battalion that infiltrated the country in September.

U.S. advisers at Tan Uyen said the Communists shot and killed the village chief and a member of the provincial council. They said the aim of the attack, in which a new market place was destroyed, was to hoist the Viet Cong flag on the district headquarters and photograph it in daylight. Another aim, they added, was to make a show of seizing a village so close to a big American installation.

In Saigon the U.S. Command announced the four U.S. jets were shot down in heavy raids on the North Friday. Some of the attacks were within 10 miles of Red China.

This brought the losses in the war to 1,003 combat planes: 783 over the North and 220 in the South. The figures do not include what the command calls "operation losses" — that is, losses not directly attributed to enemy action, such as engine failures or pilot error.

Hanoi claimed five American jets were shot down Friday, boosting to 15 the number they said they have downed since the monsoon fog and rain cover lifted Wednesday, permitting three straight days of U.S. raids. The U.S. Command has acknowledged seven losses in the three days.

American warplanes, which struck Thursday at antiaircraft batteries on a Chinese-Vietnamese railroad line only nine miles from Red China's frontier, flew just as close to the border Friday to hit a rail bridge.

They avoided the capital of Hanoi and the key port of Haiphong, however, after striking targets near those two cities for two straight days when the monsoon weather broke Wednesday.

The U.S. Command offered no explanation for the omission of targets in Hanoi and Haiphong.

The U.S. State Department, meanwhile, tentatively apologized to Moscow after the Soviet Union charged that an American delayed action bomb had disabled a Soviet freighter Thursday at Haiphong. Press officer Robert J. McCloskey said if the ship was damaged "it was inadvertent and is regretted," but on the basis of information so far available he could neither affirm nor rule out the charge.

North Vietnam charged in a broadcast today that U.S. planes dropped many bombs on Haiphong harbor Thursday, and also hit heavily populated areas of the city.

American raiders struck Friday at Kep air field northeast of Hanoi and concentrated on the northeast rail line from Hanoi to Red China, the line that carries almost all land-borne supplies from Communist bloc countries.

Ground action in South Vietnam again centered on the jungled corridor northwest of Saigon to the Cambodian border and in the far north where the five provinces below the demilitarized zone are under intense military pressure.

Guerrillas attacked U.S. 25th Infantry Division soldiers landing by helicopter 60 miles north of Saigon. The infantrymen reported killing 31 of the enemy and losing 10 killed and 10 wounded.

Red gunners fired some 250 rounds of mortar and rocket grenade fire today on the headquarters of a South Vietnamese infantry regiment 25 miles north of Saigon. The South Vietnamese, who do not announce exact losses, said casualties were light.

Later information indicated that the Viet Cong had hit the village of Tan Uyen in the morning mortar and rocket barrages and had followed them with a ground assault. One account said about 110 houses in the village had been destroyed or damaged.

There was no further information immediately available on casualties, either military or civilian.

Tan Uyen is only a few miles north of the big U.S.-South Vietnamese airbase at Bien Hoa.

McCarthy Sees No Variance in Nixon-LBJ Race

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., said today an election contest between President Johnson and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon would give the voters no choice on the Vietnam war issue.

McCarthy, who plans to contest Johnson in Democratic presidential primaries on the issue, said that the President's administration "has shown itself incapable of ending . . . or slowing down" the conflict. He said the war is taking 60 per cent of the increase in gross national product while the problems of rebuilding the cities, providing jobs and homes go unsolved.

The Minnesota senator expressed his views in a speech prepared for the Coalition for a Democratic Alternative.

He said that if Democrats yield to a call for party unity and support Johnson regardless of their views on Vietnam they may leave the voters to choose between two men who do not differ on the issue.

If Nixon is the Republican nominee, McCarthy said that he might shuffle domestic programs around but that he does not disagree with the President on war policies.

The Minnesota senator said this year's elections will offer a test of "whether the two-party electoral process is at all relevant to the overriding issue that confronts America now: The issue of war and peace."

"1968 will also provide a test of whether the present administration, elected on a platform o restraint, will be held accountable by those who nominated and elected it," he said.

"Under the institutions we have developed, the President of the United States can be held accountable only once every four years. Such a year is upon us and we cannot evade the issue any longer.

"Shall we allow 60 per cent of our increase in gross national product in 1968 to be consumed by a war in Asia, or dedicate our resources and our manpower to rebuilding our cities to provide a decent home for every family and a job to every worker and to meet more fully our other responsibilities around the world?"

McCarthy said some Americans "including some at the highest levels of government and policies" have not spoke out on Vietnam.

Next Patient Chosen As Blaiberg Improves

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP)— Dr. Philip Blaiberg was reported in satisfactory condition and cheerful today after his heart transplant operation. The head of the operating team said he now wants to do a heart transplant on an African.

On the fifth day with his new heart, the 58-year-old dentist is "enjoying life better now than before the operation," Dr. Christiaan N. Barnard said. "Even if he only lives for days, he's had that. We've given him something."

Barnard told a news conference he now wants to perform an operation on an African suffering from a disease that affects only the heart and leaves the rest of the body free of complications usually found in whites. Africans are segregated in white-ruled South Africa.

No Africans have been involved in the first two human heart transplants performed here, although the heart of a mulatto man was used in Blaiberg's operation.

This heart, taken from the body of Clive Haupt, 24, after he died from brain hemorrhage, was grafted into the body of Blaiberg.

Mrs. Blaiberg attended the funeral today of Haupt at St. Luke's Anglican church in suburban Salt River, and sent a bouquet of carnations to his widow. Haupt died Tuesday three months after marriage. Also present at the funeral were Dr. Barnard and Mayor Gerald Fernry of Cape Town.

Thousands of colored South Africans surged around the church and the graveside and though they were orderly for the most part police used dogs to keep control.

As a mulatto, Haupt was classified as "Cape colored" under this country's strict law of apartheid, or racial segregation.

Mrs. Blaiberg said she and her husband planned to give Mrs. Haupt a share of the profits from the sale of exclusive pictures and interviews to the National Broadcasting Co.

NBC said in a court memorandum that it would pay the Blaibergs $25,000 for the publication of the "first exclusive film or pictures of the operation," a $9,000 fee for exclusive films and interviews before the operation and $16,000 for similar exclusive coverage after it. However, no NBC pictures were made of the operation, apparently nullifying that part of the contract.

A special fund set up to aid the father and two brothers of Denise Darvall, whose heart was used in the world's first transplant operation in Louis Washkansky, has raised more than $7,000.

Doctors said Friday that no abnormalities have been detected in Blaiberg's condition and that changes in his cardiograph Thursday that seemed to indicate a reaction against the new heart had disappeared.

Blaiberg took his first semi-solid food—a soft boiled egg and some corn flakes— and was described as being in an excellent mood.

"He enjoys a chat," a spokesman said.

Polar Air Surge Grips Midwest

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A new blast of polar air plagued a vast stretch of the nation's midsection Saturday. Snow, sleet and freezing rain posed treacherous driving conditions for a 14-state area from the Texas Panhandle to Maryland.

The mercury plunged to 49 below in northwestern Minnesota. Temperatures were expected to drop to zero or below tonight over a 23-state area from Nevada and Montana to the Great Lakes region.

The new surge of arctic air is the third this week to numb the midcontinent. By contrast, winds from the ocean kept temperatures relatively mild in Alaska. Anchorage and Juneau had high readings Friday of 26 and Fairbanks 17.

But a bone-chilling low of -49 was recorded at Roseau, Minn. The -44 recorded at International Falls, Minn., tied the record low for the date in that city.

Freezing rain slicked highways as far south as South Carolina and Georgia in the East.

An earlier cold snap lingered over the Great Lakes and centered its punch on northern New York and New England. The temperature in the Twin Mountain, N.H., region dropped to -40 for the second time this week. Massena, N.Y., on the Canadian border, had a low of -20.

Parts of the Midwest warmed up to the 20s and 30s Friday for the first time in a week, but the Weather Bureau indicated the same regions would chill down to zero or below by Sunday morning.

A similar respite from winter miseries already was wiped out for residents of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee, hit earlier this week by more than three days of sleet and freezing rain.

Hazardous driving warnings were in effect for these states as well as Kansas and Missouri. Forecasters said the glaze warnings probably would be extended into Southern Illinois and Kentucky, the latter hit hardest by the New Year's ice storm that lasted into Thursday.

Light sleet iced over portions of Kansas as the wind-blown cold wave engulfed the midcontinent. Zero temperatures were expected for the same area tonight. Heavy ice formed on trees, shrubs and power lines in the Little Rock-Pine Bluff area of Arkansas.

Thieu Invites Hanoi To Back up Words

SAIGON (AP) — Reacting to statements from Hanoi last week seen by some observers as a softer approach to peace talks, South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu said today "everyone is waiting for a...much clearer position from Hanoi." But he added that the bombing of North Vietnam could not be stopped without reciprocal action from Hanoi.

Thieu's comments were basically in line with the U.S. position on the recent Hanoi statements, as voiced by Secretary of State Dean Rusk in a Washington news conference Thursday. Rusk, too, said the allies need to find out what Hanoi means; however, the secretary declined to say whether a bombing halt was possible without Communist reciprocity.

Thieu also told the newsmen who questioned him that his government welcomes "any movement or any informal talks from any government to bring peace for Vietnam," But he added, "I believe negotiations should be the main task between the Saigon government and the Hanoi government."

His comments came in reply to this question: "If the United States does stop bombing North Vietnam and Hanoi responds by satisfactory reciprocal action, do you have any objection to the United States talking unilaterally to the Hanoi authorities?"

His answer was not direct, but indicated he felt the United States would not begin talks with North Vietnam if Hanoi set conditions unacceptable to the Saigon government.

Complicating the picture is the question of recognition. North Vietnam considers the Thieu government a puppet regime set up by the United States and considers the Viet Cong the sole legal authority in South Vietnam. The Saigon government refuses to accord any legal status to the Viet Cong, but has said it is willing to talk with the North.

In his talks with the newsmen, Thieu also praised President Johnson for "a good gesture" in sending U.S. Ambassador Chester Bowles to Cambodia Monday for talks with ruling prince Norodom Sihanouk on Communist troops' use of Cambodia as a sanctuary from fighting in Vietnam.

Thieu also said it was "a good gesture" on Sihanouk's part to take a closer look at the problem of Communist sanctuary in Cambodia.

Prince Sihanouk indicated in responses to questions sent to him by the New York Times that he could not consider "cooperation" with the United States in investigating or rooting out Communist sanctuary camps in Cambodia. Said Sihanouk: "The only 'control' that we may accept in dealing with the Communists — and which is unassailable at law— is that which the Geneva agreements offer us, that of the ICC (the International Control Commission, set up to carry out the 1954 Geneva agreements)."

The prince said he would favor strengthening the ICC teams in Cambodia that probe for violations of Cambodia's borders by Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units. He also indicated that diplomatic relations could be resumed with the United States immediately if Bowles "brought recognition of our present borders (which would probably mean no "hot pursuit" could be attempted by U.S. troops without Sihanouk's consent."

But, Sihanouk said, even if no border recognition is forthcoming, "Bowles' mission will at least permit, if Mr. Johnson is still willing to prevent aggression against our country, a reduction in tension between the United States and Cambodia.

Salt Curbs Slickness of City Streets

City streets in the downtown area and at the main intersections are in relatively good shape today despite the freezing rain and sleet that left glass-slick surfaces throughout the area this morning.

The downtown streets and the major intersections were salted early today by city street department workers, but traffic is moving adequately, City Manager W. Raymert Miller.

Conditions were still dangerous and all motorists are urged to drive with caution, Miller said this morning.

No accidents occurred in the city this morning, police reported.

One accident occurred at 5:10 p.m. Friday at Main and Malone. An automobile driven by Mrs. Estelle Hampton, route two, Sikeston, struck a car driven by Mrs. Joyce Murphy, 716 Vernon, during the rush hour.

Mrs. Hampton was charged with failure to have her vehicle under control, Officer Robert Johnson reported.

School Invaded By Spiders to Reopen Tuesday

MATTOON, Ill. (AP) — Officials at Mattoon High School have announced that classes will resume Tuesday following an invasion of dangerous brown recluse spiders that forced the closing of the school.

Supt. John G. Warg closed the school Thursday afternoon after a biology teacher found one of the spiders in a desk drawer at the school. Exterminators were called.

The exterminators reported Friday they found the spiders throughout the school and said thousands of them had invaded halls and lockers in the building.

Stevenson Moore III, an agricultural entomologist at the University of Illinois, said the spiders were not "highly fatal," but their bite caused intense pain.

Anti-U.S. Signs Greet Humphrey

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — About 300 university students hanged President Johnson in effigy today and chanted anti-American slogans while waiting for Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey to come and talk to them.

The students carried dozens of signs assailing the U.S. role in Vietnam, such as "Americans hands are red with the blood of Vietnamese children."

Humphrey, delayed by a two-hour meeting with Emperor Haile Selassie, canceled plans to address the students. This caused one student leader to say: "We are very disappointed the vice president is not coming. We just wanted him to know how we felt."

Humphrey went to the audience with the emperor after a major address in which he said President Johnson's administration refused to retreat before the "new isolationism" caused by congressional cuts in U.S. foreign aid.

The vice president said the administration will take its case for more foreign aid directly to the American people.

Two other Democrats also have filed — William E. Robinson of Jefferson city, the state party committee's treasurer, and Lewis E. Morris of Jefferson City, a retired Army officer.

Haggerty is a former Jackson County circuit clerk, has worked in several state offices and has been in the hotel and investment business.

Woman Missionary Describes 3-Day Ordeal

EDITOR's NOTE: For three days Miss Jean Laing, 35, an American missionary teacher, was lost in the central Malaysian jungles with three Malaysian hiking companions. They were found Friday by aborigine tribesmen. All were reported in good condition today. From her hospital bed, where she is recuperating from minor bruises and exhaustion, Miss Laing relates her ordeal.

By JEAN LAING

CAMERON HIGHLANDS, Malaysia (AP) — I had climbed the mile-high Mt. Beremban five times since arriving in Malaysia two years ago. It would generally take only about three hours to make the trek up to the top and back to Dalat School, where I teach.

On Tuesday I invited three children from a family that lives near the school to come along with me for another hike up the hill. We left at 9 a.m. and were to be back in time for lunch.

We got to the top of the hill on schedule and then decided to explore a different way down, but we soon became puzzled, as we found so many paths in front of us.

We picked one and started following it, but after walking about two miles we realized it was not the correct one because the jungle was getting thicker and thicker and the trees taller and taller.

We decided to try to return to the top of the hill, but we couldn't find the way because again there were so many paths made by previous hikers. We stumbled many times and got minor cuts.

It was very dark then, although it was only 4 p.m., and we felt cold and hungry.

Young Balbir Singh— he's only 11— started crying, and he just wouldn't stop, although I and his older brother, Manjit, 12, and sister, Sarjit Kaur, 14, did our best to comfort him.

We decided to spend the night in the jungle, and we huddled together to keep warm. We had no warm clothes to protect us from the cold nights, when the temperature is about 50 degrees.

Suddenly, about 10:30 p.m., we heard some people shouting our names. We were sure it was a search party. We heard them whistling and we heard dogs barking.

We started shouting back to them, screaming our lungs out, but we couldn't make ourselves heard. Slowly, we could hear the searchers' voices fade away.

We passed the first night in the jungle, as we did the others, without sleep, partly because it was so cold and we were scared of wild animals, such as tigers. There also were a lot of mosquitos.

I kept praying to God all the time to keep the wild animals away from us and to lead us to safety.

The next day, Wednesday, we started downhill and came across a river.

The first thing I did was to make the children drink water out of the stream. They didn't want to because the water was dirty. But I forced them to drink it because I knew they needed water to survive. Since we had no food with us, the children had become very hungry, although fortunately I did not.

We started following the river upstream, hoping to find houses or aborigine settlements. But it was in vain, and so we went back to the jungle for the second night because it was too cold by the side of the river.

I knew God was watching and seeing us, but I didn't know why He was taking so long to lead us out.

On Thursday we decided to follow the river downstream, and we soon came across what seemed to be tiger footmarks. The children were very frightened. Although exhausted, we kept on going and praying.

By Friday morning, I was literally crawling along the river stream, and the children were pulling me. I could hardly go another step. I knew I wouldn't have been able to survive another night.

I understand the doctors are saying I held the group together mentally while the children helped me physically. All I can say is that the children certainly helped me.

At about noon we came across an opening in the jungle, so I sent Manjit ahead.

As soon as he reached the clearing, he became excited and started shouting in Malay, "tolong, tolong," or "help, help."

He had spotted a group of 15 aborigines on the other side of the river. The aborigines rushed over to us and quickly started a fire and cooked us some rice and fish that they had with them.

I knew God had answered our prayers.

The two boys finished their meal very quickly. But the girl and I could not eat so fast because we were too exhausted and it took us one hour to eat a plate of rice and fish.

The aborigines cut some branches and jungle vines to make an improvised stretcher for me because I was too weak to walk.

With the children walking alongside me, I was carried for one hour to a nearby aborigine settlement. After a short rest, we set out again, and two hours later we reached a tea plantation where police met us and took us to the hospital.

Although mountain climbing has been my favorite pastime, I have no interest in it at the moment and will not go out out again unless I know the place well.

Right now, I'm just thankful to be alive.

POOR CHARLIE SAYS!

LOUISVILLE'S HOUSING ORDINANCE

Twenty-one states and numerous cities have laid the basis for an attack on housing discrimination by enacting open housing legislation. A major effort was made in 1966 to put through federal legislation of this kind -- proscribing discrimination in the sale or rental of housing on the basis of race, color, creed, or national origin -- but it failed in the U. S. Senate. This year the emphasis has been at state and local levels.

The latest example is an open housing ordinance passed by the Louisville, Ky., Board of Aldermen which will become effective today. The ordinance makes it illegal to refuse to sell or rent on the above-named basis. The only exceptions are apartments of four units or less if the owner or a member of the family lives in the building, and rooming houses occupied by the owner or a member of his family. The measure also prohibits discrimination by financial institutions and realtors in housing transactions.

The ordinance provides fines of up to $100. Mayor Kenneth A. Schmied refused to sign the measure because, he said, it gave too much power to the Louisville and Jefferson County Human Relations Commission. The commission is empowered to investigate racial discrimination in housing, conduct hearings, and impose fines or seek court orders to enforce the law. Many an open housing law has failed to effectively increase residential integration because of lack of enforcement.

FIRE BUTLER

Missouri Industrial Commission Chairman James J. Butler should be dismissed.

He was the guiding force in an attempt to gouge Missouri taxpayers by setting St. Louis steamfitter pay scales as the wage rate for Jefferson City public construction work, even though local contractors had been paying a lower scale under a local agreement.

Butler, who has close ties with the St. Louis steamfitters, was a poor choice in the beginning. When appointed, he was a member of a Clayton law firm headed by the late John O'Connell Hough, a close associate and attorney for John L. Lawler, assistant business manager of St. Louis Steamfitters Local 562.

The controversy began last spring when The Globe-Democrat disclosed that the commission had set the St. Louis Local 562 pay rates in Jefferson City -- $2.12 an hour more than contractors on private projects were paying under their agreement with the Jefferson City local.

In ruling that the Missouri Industrial Commission's decision on the highway pay scale should be invalidated, Cole County Circuit Judge James T. Riley said the commission had based its wage determination solely on steamfitter pay at the construction site of the Chesebrough-Pond, Inc., manufacturing plant in Jefferson City involving mechanical work of $1.3 million.

It failed to consider that the Jefferson City pay scale had been paid on $3.9 million worth of public projects between May 1, 1966, and . April 19, 1967.

The lower pay scale also was paid on private work totaling $856,984 during this same period.

By law, wage determinations by the commission should be made on all projects involving use of public funds.

It is obvious that the commission headed by Butler failed to observe the procedure spelled out by the law.

Butler, who tried to defend this gouge of Missouri taxpayers even after it was exposed by this newspaper, should be removed from this important post without delay.

The cost of government is expensive enough today without inflating it by excessive labor costs.

WHY NATIONAL HIGHWAY SAFETY?

When we study the drinking patterns of American society and contrast them with the attitudes and statements of our church groups comprising this society, we are face to face with the great American dilemma. The good that we would, we do not.

In the face of mounting evidence from research groups of the critical nature of the problems of drinking, drunkeness, and alcoholism in the United States, too many are still unconcerned and "pass by on the other side."

Sunday, February 25, 1968 has been designated "Safety Sunday" by the National Foundation for Highway Safety. On this day we are asked to challenge our members to drive courteously and at all times soberly.

Let us admit that simple knowledge of the facts of the problem is not enough. What is needed is a radical change in the behavior patterns of millions of Americans. This behavior pattern for many will affirm the principle of voluntary abstinence for the sake of love of God and concern for neighbor. For others, it will be a new degree of moderation and restraint and an awakened conscience regarding the dilemma. For those who travel on the "misty flats," or even on the "low road" of intoxication, let us designate Sunday, February 25, as the day when we pass from dilemma to decision.

We must recognize a new relatedness and interdependency of alcohol problems calling for massive cooperation and multidisciplinary approaches that involve the total community. Nothing less than ecumenical social action will be required to make the necessary behavioral pattern change in our living.

Mr. Maurice H. Stans, the former Director of the Budget, said in a recent Address: "The reasonable growth of government spending under orderly programs to meet real needs of the people cannot be questioned. But government spending for the purpose of inhibiting the competitive system is destructive. American business should take heed of the dangers of this philosophy. A $300 billion budget in 1980 will provide a lot of government. Do you want that much?" We should all ponder Mr. Stans' admonition and remember that the answers is to start cutting federal spending now.

NEW CAMPUS RADIO SERIES BEGINS IN FALL

The first in a series of 15-minute programs for college campus radio stations had just been recorded by the National Assocation of Manufacturers for release this fall. "The programs are designed to help close the campus industry 'communications gap'," the NAM said.

Nine programs - one a month from September through May, 1968 - will be offered free to the 465 campus radio stations throughout the country.

The series is being programed and directed by NAM and produced and distributed by Radio-TV Features, Inc., a New York communications firm which specializes in campus radio programming.

"The programs will give students a chance to ask business leaders directly the 'no holds barred' questions young people have been posing about the role of business in our society, and about the opportunities in business for young people who are anxious to serve mankind idealistically," the NAM explained.

The association said that a wide range of topics will be covered in the series, each program featuring different participants. Only the program moderator, Sherman B. Chickering, youthful publisher of the campus magazine, Moderator, will be on all the programs.

The as yet unnamed radio series is the result of an NAM campus - industry relations program which began last year following opinion surveys which showed that an increasing number of top students felt "business is for the birds."

NAM's initial conference on the problem, held last year in New York, proved so popular that others were subsequently staged in San Francisco and Milwaukee, Wis. A fourth will be held Oct. 12 in Greensboro, N.C.

Businessmen and educators who participated in these conferences agreed that a "communications gap" exists between the younger generation and business.

SPACE FOR MIRACLES

In the United States we, more than most other peoples, have been blessed with vast and fertile lands. They have been bountiful in yielding food and fuels, clothing and shelter, minerals and mountainous harvests of all the things our people have required.

But, many Americans have accepted the bounty and beauty of the land without recognizing the burdens we impose upon it. We live in a time of mushrooming population; sprawling cities, superhighways, airports, parking lots, seashores and scenic monuments, wilderness areas and parks are encroaching upon the nation's productive land at a fantastic rate.

This year, again, there are quarrels between the productive users of our land, and those who prefer that more land be set aside for recreational, esthetic and cultural purposes. No one questions the conviction and dedication of those who wish to preserve wilderness areas, establish parks and protect the scenic grandeur of our country. But the stark reality is that the thousands of products which our forests yield for our people are of tremendous national significance, too. Growing trees and harvesting them in an endless cycle is an absolute essential if our country is to prosper and grow.

It is elemental that trees require land. It is equally obvious that this is one national resource which can be replenished, by forest regeneration. This is not true of petroleum or minerals, for example. When these resources are depleted they are gone forever. The replenishment cycle for our forests can be accomplished only if sufficient land is provided for the regrowth process.

Yet, if the Congress were to pass, in their present forms, just those bills which the Secretary of Interior has put forward this year to establish new Federal parks and trails, the impact upon our timberlands would be catastrophic, so seriously would they reduce the nation's opportunity to grown trees, harvest them, and replant.

It is the land itself which is the priceless natural resource of our nation. It can never be enlarged. Given access to the land we can grow trees forever. Denied th land, we cannot.

It has been said that "a tree is a miracle of God." But even a miracle requires growing space.

LET STORES HELP YOU WITH FIT OF CLOTHES

The men of this country are the best dressed you'll find anywhere, but there is one element that does not live up to the overall image. They select the proper clothes, but - when in a store's fitting room to decide on proper alterations for the new garment - they insist on making decisions as to how the suit should fit. Many of these men are assisted in the decision - making by their wives. This results in an imbalance of opinions, and the husband and wife usually get their way. (That, incidentally, must be the reason we see so many men wearing sleeves and trousers too long - which no professional fitter would countenance unless he was coerced!) So - to those of you who want to be really well dressed, and to you wives -- the American institute suggests you let the fitter decide on how the suit should fit. He knows!

An Editors Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

'HELPERS' AND DIGNITY

LAST month I spent an hour touring Brigham Young's "Beehive House" in Salt Lake City. It is a big house, as befitted a man who had 17 wives and 56 children. It is lavish by the standards of 100 years ago, for its owner was not only leader of the Mormon Church but governor of Utah Territory as well. It is the unapologetic mansion of a gifted and successful man.

But what intrigued me was the description by the intelligent woman guide of Brigham's relief system.

MANY of the faithful who struggled out to Salt Lake in the early days arrived with nothing. Literally nothing. So it was incumbent upon the community to keep them eating until they could carve out some acreage in the rich valley and dig an irrigation ditch.

Some of these people live in the Beehive House. They were not referred to as servants -- Brigham called them "helpers." But they did the work of servants and they got no pay. And for those who couldn't find room in the house there was the wall, which surrounded the house to overawe any marauding Indians. But, really, it was a make-work project: a day's labor on the wall got you two quarts of wheat.

MANY of the leading Utah families are descendants of helpers in the house and workers on the wall. These are prideful families. They glory in the humble beginnings of their Mormon ancestors. Indeed, no church is preoccupied with genealogy as the Latter-day Saints.

What Brigham Young discovered was a way of relief that didn't demean but even ennobled. It was not a way of life; it was a bridge to cross a chasm. You don't live on a bridge -- you use it to get somewhere.

THE New York Times of Nov. 23 reported that New York City's relief load has now climbed to 764,000. Even the most pessimistic forecasters didn't anticipate this figure until next June. In 20 months the New York City relief rolls have risen by 211,000.

Part of this rise is due to a new policy by the state of New York to the effect that adult children are no longer legally responsible for the support of their parents. If you dump the old folks on the taxpayers, you may be able to afford wall-to-wall carpeting or a better car.

Some of the increase is, of course, due to the fact that the job market for the utterly unskilled is shrinking. But it has not vanished. There are still plenty of busboy and dishwasher-wanted signs. And no one seems to want to be a helper in the house any more. These jobs are not considered dignified.

Most alarming is the beginning of the third generation of chronic reliefers. There are now babies whose parents and grandparents have no history of gainful employment. People born on the bridge are now dying on the bridge. They never get to the other side.

NOTHING has gone more haywire in America than the prevailing theories of public assistance and social uplift. A theorist is hard to separate from his theory, particularly if he has a graduate degree in sociology. The more the theories have failed, the more money he demands for their implementation.

We have been involved in all kinds of contradictions. In an effort to diminish aid-to-dependent children payments, we have driven the man-of-the-house out of the house during the day. But he returns at night to breed more "fatherless children."

When the city fathers of Newburgh, N.Y., alarmed at the influx of families from New York City slums, tried to set up a compulsory work program, the "liberal" press screamed at this attempt to rob the poor of dignity. Brigham Young's proud helpers would have been amazed.

WHAT we have is a "war on poverty" that has, in effect, written off millions of our fellow citizens. It preaches equality but perpetuates degradation. As our relief loads have grown, so have crime, family irresponsibility and social commotion. Clearly, it's time for a new look.

Maybe we ought to take a tour through old Brigham's Beehive House. A beehive is a busy, orderly place. It produces, not filth, but honey. There is no dignity without work, no uplift without struggle, no education without dedication.

Since recent theories are obviously bankrupt, we'd better look at a great national public works program in which no able-bodied and mentally normal relief recipient will be eligible for aid without making himself available for a public job or for training that will give him a marketable skill. Money tossed over the transom improves no one.

Brigham Young's people sang as they scoured the pots and built the wall. And the crowd moved across the bridge into the Land of Zion.

LBJ WORRIED!

President Sets Up New Team to Head Off 'Crippling Work Stoppages' In '68

Washington, D. C.: -- One of the favorite stories of that urbane wit, Labor Secretary Willard Wirtz, (stolen from this columnist) is the tale of the egotistical lion who goes roaring through the underbrush, asking in a loud voice, "Who is the king of the jungle? The monkey says, "You are, sir." So does the impala. But the huge elephant, irritated, hurls the inquiring beast against a rock.

Unsteadily, the lion turns towards the mastodon and says plaintively, "Just because I ask a question, you don't have to get mad."

Well, Mr. Wirtz has not yet asked a single question and the leaders of labor are already ruffled. Wirtz and Secretary of Commerce Alexander Trowbridge, the Cabinet's two most suave figures, have been "instructed" by President Johnson to head off all those "crippling work stoppages" scheduled for 1968.

They can't fulfill the assignment. But they'll try. And they'll have to try alone. The President has virtually phased out the old Labor - Management Advisory Committee. He's using a stronger offense by throwing his Cabinet members into the game.

No one can head off the horrendously costly strikes this year without invoking court injunctions. Not only is the lineup of 1967's formidable labor leaders -- such as the Machinists' Roy Siemiller, the auto union's Walter Reuther and steel's I. W. Abel -- ready for a massive plunge, but the lesser knowns are also coming into the super bowl.

Of the four million workers whose contracts expire this year, there are some 500,000 communication employes led by a determined Joe Beirne, several hundred thousand rail workers and at least 185,000 coal miners who are headed by an angry Tony Boyle.

Add this to the fermenting aerospace, waterfront and steel industries, throw in the cooper strike now in its sixth month, and you have a pack of political and economic dynamite.

The President wants it defused. That's his word to Wirtz and Trowbridge.

What troubles the President is the awesome direct cost of labor-management jousting -- not just the deluge of imports when one of our industries is missing, but the actual direct cost.

Few realizes that Reuther's union spent $42 million on the Ford strike and a few smaller stoppages during September, October and November. And he still has some $43 million with which to back up "local" General Motors stoppages.

Not a minor matter is the loss of some $223.6 million in wages by Ford employes. The Ford company recons that the nation was hit for $2 billion as a result of that 60-day walkout.

The tax income on such amounts would have made the Treasury Dept.'s days much brighter.

And then there is the "smaller" copper (nonferrous) strike. It's already cost the 26-union combine some $25 million in strike relief and other expenses. Wage losses are close to $160 million, it is estimated.

Total loss to the struck states, industries and workers is well over $300 million. And it has hit communities ranging from Bisbee, Ariz., and Tacoma, Wash., to Perth Amboy, N. J. The wage loss in the latter city at two refineries alone is estimated at $2 million monthly.

And these are small stakes, costly as they are, compared to what will be on the table if the waterfront and the steel industry are shut down next September or October.

Just how the new team of Wirtz and Trowbridge will mastermind and quarterback the assignment and block those strikes is difficult to predict.

They are up against Siemiller who shut down the airlines and railroads in the past two years; Reuther who was all set to paralyze General Motors; the longshoremen's Teddy Gleason who, politely enough, rejected a flat request from the late Jack Kennedy to unfreeze the Atlantic and Gulf ports back in 1962; and the quiet man, "Ambassador" I. W. Abel, head of the steel union.

The latter, despite all the public talk of his inclination towards arbitration, has told his colleagues he's "sick of the White House's refusal to permit them to strike."

So Wirtz and Trowbridge will do their smoothest best. But they will fail unless the unions are granted record new wage and fringe packages running into many billions.

So sooner or later the President will have to be his own business agent.

It won't be easy, what with being a presidential candidate at the same time.

Money, the President will find, as Harry Truman once told this correspondent in the hours before he seized the steel mills, is the root of all upheaval on the industrial front.

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY: U.S. and Israeli intelligence disagree on Soviet menace; Israelis anticipate another war in six months; they assess current situation as Russian - American confrontation.

WASHINGTON -- American and Israeli intelligence reports sharply disagree on the extent of the Soviet threat in the Middle East. This has produced an "intelligence gap" which President Lyndon Johnson and Premier Levi Eshkol are attempting to bridge at their Texas conference.

The President brought to the LBJ ranch a secret report on the Middle East which takes a moderate view of the Soviet menance. Eshkol's intelligence presents a far more alarming picture of Russian penetration into the Arab world.

The official American assessment is that the Russians would like to keep the Middle East tense in order to exploit the situation, but do not intend to let events run out of control again. The disastrous Arab military defeat, in the American view, has had a restraining influence on the Kremlin.

The Israelis are convinced, however, that the Russians are moving into the Middle East to stay, and that only a blunt American ultimatum will prevent another Arab-Israeli war.

Here are the essential differences between American and Israeli intelligence:

1. The Israelis claim that Russia has already replaced the weapons the Arabs lost during the six-day war last June. U.S. intelligence estimates the replacement around 80 per cent. Both countries agree that the new Soviet weapons are more modern than Israeli equipment.

2. U.S. intelligence claims Egypt will be in no shape to menace Israel again for another two years at least. The Israeli assessment is that the Egyptians will be ready for another war in six months. The Russians also expect another Arab-Israeli war, according to U.S. intelligence from Moscow, but not for perhaps four or five years.

SOVIET SEAPOWER

3. The Israelis claim the Russians are using ports in Egypt and Algeria as naval bases. This means they intend to keep a fleet in the Mediterranean permanently, the Israelis warn. The Americans, however, believe Russia sent ships into the Mediterranean on a temporary basis as a gesture to impress the Arabs. Both American and Israeli estimates place the number of Soviet ships now in the Mediterranean around 45, though the Israelis claim the number fluctuates between 40 and 50 and the Americans show a fluctuation between 40 and 45. In contrast the U.S. Sixth Fleet has 50 ships in the Mediterranean; also, they pack greater fire power than the Soviet ships.

4. The Israelis say that 3,500 Russian technicians have arrived in Egypt and have already infiltrated the Egyptian army down to the battalion level. U.S. intelligence gives the figure as 2,500.

Israel is concerned over the number of late-model, supersonic Soviet planes which the Russians have introduced into Egypt, plus the construction of underground hangars to prevent Israel from catching the planes on the ground again as they did last June.

In short, the Israelis see the Middle East crisis no longer as an Arab-Israeli conflict but as a Soviet-American confrontation. They contend that the arms balance has been upset by Soviet shipments to the Arabs and that a military stalemate cannot be maintained without equal American shipments to Israel.

Finally, the Israelis believe it will take an American ultimatum, declaring the firm intention of the United States to intervene, to prevent an otherwise inevitable Arab attempt to crush Israel.

A pro-Israel policy is bitterly resisted, however, by the state department, which doesn't want to antagonize the Arabs. The State Department planners who prepared the secret Middle Eastern report for the President are distinctly pro-Arab.

PRO-ARAB DIPLOMATS

Almost all the foreign service officers who work on Middle Eastern affairs have served in Arab countries and are sympathetic to the Arab viewpoint. Even the Israeli desk officer, who handles the cables from the American embassy in Tel Aviv, has a pro-Arab background.

Until last year, the desk officer was Michael Sterner, who studied the Arabic language in Yemen, served in Cairo and manned the Egyptian desk at the state department before he was put in charge of Israeli affairs.

His successor is Alfred Atherton, Jr., who has served in Syria and as country director for Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Iraq before he was transferred to the Israeli desk.

The American ambassador in Israel, Wadsorth Barbour, is sympathetic toward Israel, but his diplomatic dispatches have always been processed by pro-Arab desk officers. At the White House, the President's foreign affairs specialist, Walt Rostow, though Jewish, has usually gone along with the state department's pro-Arab recommendations.

Almost without exception, the President has been obliged to overrule the state department every time he has made a decision favorable to Israel.

Note: At the LBJ ranch, Premier Eshkol has emphasized to the President Israel's urgent need for supersonic planes. The Israelis fear that Egypt's new Soviet planes, if flown by Soviet pilots, would control the skies. Russia has already set a precedent by sending Soviet pilots to fly some of the new planes which have just arrived in Yemen. The state department has verified that Soviet pilots are flying combat missions against royalist forces assaulting Yemen's capital.

Advance Rolls PastBloomfield

ADVANCE -- Using the run and shoot ball tactics of the old Puxico Indian and More Tiger teams of the late 1950s the Advance Hornets handed Bloomfield its third straight basketball defeat last night.

Advance broke into a 12-7 first period lead and never trailed. The Hornets broke down floor for fast break baskets time and again.

But the big story of the night was the Hornets' defensive work. They held all but one Wildcat player to under eight points, including the Cats' big 6-6 center Glenn "Rawhide" Williamson, who got only eight points.

Both teams drew numerous fouls. They used pressing defenses with Advance taking 25 personals to Bloomfield's 24.

John Moroni's 15 points topped an eight-man scoring barrage of the Hornets, who got two others in twin figures. Ford Morgan and Tony Jenkins dropped in 11 markers apiece.

The win moved the Hornets closer to a .500 season at 6-8. The loss was the fifth for the Wildcats, third in a row since losing in the consolation bracket of its invitational tournament last weekend. Puxico upended the Cats earlier this week.

Sports Corner

By RON JAYNES

EDITOR'S NOTE -- This is the first of a series on what high school athletics are all about.

By Clifford B. Fogan
Executive Secretary, National Federation of High School Athletic Associations

The title of this presentation is "What Is It All About?" This certainly is not an original title. Neither is it new. The question has been asked before, originally, perhaps, by L. W. Smith, the National Federation's first secretary. Since then, it has been posed from time to time. It continues to be a good question for those responsible for the determination of policies and procedures for interscholastic athletics. Obviously, it is not sophisticated but it requires thought to answer. We trust that each and every person attending this session today has asked it.

School athletics are about education. The only reason we have the athletics in the school curriculum is that they can and do contribute to the education of participants and spectators. The person who strives for sophistication may attempt to classify this reply as trite. For such people we have sympathy. They are cynics or incapable of giving direction to a program with great and unique potential.

It is not at all academic that athletics are included in the school curriculum today because they can and do contribute to education. Not only can they make this contribution, but they must do it. When we avoid facing up to this question, when we fail to acknowledge the purpose of athletics, and when we fail to keep them on a direct course to the stated objective, we have problems.

Many of our problems result from a misunderstanding of the purposes of interscholastic athletics. The principal source of confusion is the comparison of professional athletics with school athletics. Suffice it to say that the professionals are in the entertainment business. They are in show business and their purposes are to entertain and to earn a financial return for the producer. In a sense, the players are performers. They are actors.

The acknowledgment that professional athletics is a form of show business does not in any way indict them. Not at all. They are wonderful entertainment. There are those among us who believe that there are few forms of entertainment which are better. However, we most certainly must not labor under the misconception that the Bart Starrs, the Johnny Unitas, the Carl Yastremskis, the Bill Russells, and the other participants in professional athletics are being educated in a way you and I would have school athletics educate high school boys and girls. We point out that there is a vital difference between the professional and interscholastic levels, a difference which must be understood by educators, and a different the public all too often fails to understand. The professionals are interested in the income which accrues from their competition. We will agree, I'm sure, that their efforts have been well rewarded in this respect. When there is a failure to understand this difference, there is a possibility of trouble for the school.

To point out that there is a fundamental difference in the purpose of the program does not carry with it any implication whatever that interscholastic athletics should not entertain, nor that income should not be derived from them. The contrary is true. One of the benefits derived from a good, sound interscholastic athletic program, is that it does provide wholesome entertainment. It provides an activity around which the student body can center its attention and which involves the community. This can be wholesome if the leadership is strong and proper.

A fair and reasonable income inuring from admissions to interscholastic athletic events is desirable. There is nothing whatever wrong with requiring an admission fee to interscholastic athletic contests, particularly from non-students. In addition to providing some means of defraying the cost of the program, admissions charges provide a means of control.

For the professionals, the income determines the policy. For interscholastics, the income or potential income must never determine the policy. The matter of income from secondary school athletic programs must be a secondary consideration and, in fact, be incidental.

Neither the participant, the program, nor the school must be exploited for any reason whatever. Exploitation most frequently results when income determines a policy, but there are other reasons which may cause participants, programs, or the institutions, to be exploited. Among these are the desire for publicity, and the determination to win at whatever the cost.

Today, state associations throughout the United States protect participants, programs, and schools from exploitation. One of the principal purposes for which state associations were formed was to protect the participant and school program. As all of us know, interscholastic athletics were a natural outgrowth of student interest. School administrators, about the turn of the century, had their schools join together in associations for the specific purpose of subjugating athletics. Many of the leaders did not realize the educational potential of interscholastics. They did not have an understanding of what athletics could do for a student or a school. They considered them vulgar, a waste of time, and actually indicted those who participated in them. However, by the second decade of the 1900's knowledgeable administrators realized there was going to be an interscholastic program and that it was possible to channel it into individual and institutional good. As a result, state associations established a board to carry out the policies which the schools as a group, adopted. This board was called the Board of Control. The name, Board of Control, was not just a chance designation arrived at by chance. It meant exactly what it said. It was for the control of interscholastics.

From 1920 to 1940, the state association programs were developed and refined. In general, they expanded. It was during this period that the opportunities and possibilities of educating through athletics were first realized. Then in the period from 1940 to the present, the program continued to expand. Naturally there is less pioneering now. In fact, there is some promoting of the sports program.

In 1964 when the Cardinals won the pennant and World Series, they had 3 players who hit over .300 - they were: Lou Brock with .315, Curt Flood with .311 and Bill White with .303. Next in line were Ken Boyer, .295 - Dick Groat, .292 and Tim McCarver .288.

In 1947, Jerome "Whitey" Harris won the Vermont singles classic at Los Angeles with a 4-game total of 896 and received $500.

In the 1920-21 season a Gary, Indiana, bowler named A. M. Hazelgreen finished the season with a 186 average to lead his league and he did not have a 600 series in the entire 33-week season. Pretty consistent I'd say.

Joseph Paul (Joe) DiMaggio had a lifetime batting average of .325 and twice led the league with .381 in 1939 and .352 in 1940. He also hit safely in 56 consecutive games in 1941. Bowling Magazine published by the American Congress was started in 1934. It is sent free to all sanctioned league secretaries.

Scott County's attack was hampered by the loss of one of its ace shooters and rebounders, Lee Stevens, who has been ill with the flu since it's Cape Girardeau Christmas tournament championship win. He had been averaging around 15 points for the Braves.

Lilbourn Turns Back Gideon In Loop Play

LILBOURN -- The Lilbourn Panthers stumped Gideon in a pair of New Madrid County conference basketball games last last night, taking a 51-43 varsity win after the junior varsity edged out a 33-30 victory.

Lilbourn used its pressing man to man defense, grabbing the ball on numerous mistakes. It trailed 11-7 in the first quarter, but exploded for 21 points in the third period to move ahead after a 22-22 tie.

Gideon did a little defense work of its own. It held the Panthers usually high scoring Larry Wolfe to five points, 13 below his season average. Joe Baldwin, Harold Allred and Mike Bowen took up the slack by pouring in 15, 15 and 11 points.

Jerry Coleman, Gideon's ace junior center, rolled up 20 points, two below his season average to lead the Bulldogs' attack.

The win moved the Panthers to the .500 mark for the season with a 7-7 showing. The defeat was only the sixth loss to go with eight wins for Gideon.

HOLES IN THE CHURCH FENCE

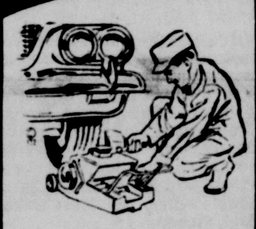

I noticed a fence the other day. There were many strands of wire. And yet there were many holes between the strands. Nonetheless each piece of wire held tightly to each other piece and in spite of the holes it was a good fence. The church is this way. The lives of those of us who compose the church have their holes, their imperfections. But as we learn to hold to one another in the fellowship Christ makes possible our lives begin to become something more than they could be alone. The church has something to contribute to your life. I hope your are finding it.

Sincerely,
Robert E. Lively, Jr.

STAR IN A SARI meets a national leader in similar attire. The sari is one of 17 owned by Shirley, who proudly points out she can tie them herself.

PEACE CANDIDATE challenger to President Johnson may be entered in next year's Democratic primaries in the person of Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota. McCarthy, who was under consideration as the President's vice-presidential running mate in 1964, says he is prepared to challenge Johnson in the primaries with the sole objective of inducing a change in administration policy on Vietnam.

In the late 1940s, fire losses (exclusive of forest fires) came to more than 3 per cent of the U.S. gross national product, according to National Fire Protection Association statistics. The rate has declined to little more than 2 per cent currently, although the total dollar loss is much higher because of the rapid growth of the GNP during the past two decades.

SYMBOL OF PEACE soars skyward in Hiroshima, Japan. The Peace Clock Tower, donated by the city's Rijo Lions Club, stands near the bombed-out World Peace Memorial, background, and will chime every day at 8:16 a.m., the exact time the atomic bomb flashed over the city Aug. 6, 1945.

NOT REGULATION headgear exactly, but goathorns obviously strike the fancy of a stubble-bearded trooper of the 101st Airborne Division participating in an operation north of Chu Lai, South Vietnam.

Missouri—America's Exciting Land of Western Lore

Jesse James . . . Joseph Smith . . . Mark Twain—these are just a few of the famous names in American history that are associated with Missouri.

A combination of famous historic landmarks and scenic beauty make Missouri a photographer's paradise, where there's something to snap wherever you turn.

In Liberty, Missouri, the Liberty jail—where the "Mormon Prophet", Joseph Smith was imprisoned during the bitter winter of 1838-39—has been restored by members of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Today it's a hallowed and sacred place to members of the religious order. The cutaway restoration of the jail, including the dungeon, is housed in one of the most beautiful buildings to be found in the state. Untold thousands visit the shrine each year. They come from every state in the Union and many foreign countries.

It was in Liberty, too, that Jesse James and his gang staged history's first daylight bank robbery on February 13, 1866. On a corner of the square is the oldest landmark — the building that housed the bank reputedly robbed on that day.

This statue in St. Joseph, Missouri, commemorates the days of the famous Pony Express, which carried the mails between April 3, 1860 and October 24, 1861.

In "Mark Twain's" home town of Hannibal, Missouri, on the banks of the Mississippi River, a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer stands in tribute to one of the state's most famous citizens.

Recently, a distant cousin of a man killed during the holdup acquired the building and rebuilt it exactly as it was at the time.

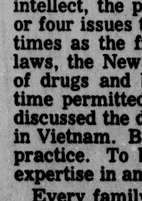

North of Liberty, outside the town of Kearny, stands the home of Jesse and Frank James. It still contains much of the original furniture and can be toured for a small fee. On the edge of Kearny, you can see James' grave, where it lies near two giant cedar trees.

The house where the outlaw was killed—on April 5, 1882, by two of his cronies, Bob and Charles Ford—may be visited in St. Joseph, Missouri, and is still furnished as it was on the day of the murder, including the plaque "Home Sweet Home" that James was allegedly in process of hanging on the wall when he was shot.

In St. Joseph, another must-see is The Pony Express Museum, which tells the story of St. Joseph graphically, along with the history of the Pony Express from April 3, 1860 to October 24, 1861.

Samuel Clemens, better known as "Mark Twain," grew up in the Mississippi River town, which has a population of 21,000, has a lighthouse and bridge named for Mark Twain, and a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer that was erected in tribute to one of America's most famous authors.

Other notable Missourians have included Daniel Boone and General Grant — both owned farms there—and former President Harry S. Truman.

Man's All-Wise Pose Casts Doubts on His Credibility

By DAVID POLING

One of my theories is that leaders in national life are allowed only one or two areas of authority and respect. They might extend their interest to other fields, in rare exceptions be a "renaissance man" and capture several more. But usually you are allowed one or two major lines and that's it.

When Wilt Chamberlain admitted that he was considering the world of professional boxing nobody wrote for tickets. Why? He is Mr. Basketball. His court play, team effort and personal excellence are unsurpassed. Honor and fame and cash have flooded in. But boxing? He was about as welcome as a giraffe at a dog show. He had found and claimed his place in the sports world and in the heart of the fans on the basketball court. He got the message.

Do you recall the news item that appeared before the national political conventions of 1964 stating that, in spite of the rumors, Billy Graham would not consider an invitation to be on a party ticket? It was almost funny. The public has long shown its interest and support of Graham as evangelist and preacher in countless religious meetings and services. But no one beyond Graham's staff had ever allowed that he might run for political office.

The result would be embarrassing to the public and disastrous to the evangelist. One field yes—two, no.

This is true on delicate social issues and the role of a local minister. A congregation or community will respond to their pastor if he takes a strong stand, say, on fair housing. It won't be pleasant and the strain soon separates the bigots from the believers. But, generally, the congregation will take it if he doesn't call for getting rid of the choir director or the burning of draft cards. These other issues may be just as important to him but he wisely learns to pace himself, like the dentist, who drills and then cools.

This is what is happening to Bishop Pike. His interest, concern and involvement in so many social-religious-ethical debates has brought him to the credibility gap with his friends and the public.

Being a person of such unusual charm and such a towering intellect, the public seems to have given Pike at least three or four issues to employ. So he has had some pretty thrilling times as the front runner on things like reform of abortion laws, the New Morality, birth control, the experimental use of drugs and better understanding for homosexuals. When time permitted, he also reworked the creeds of his church, discussed the death of God and outlined new moves for peace in Vietnam. But then my Wilt Chamberlain theory came into practice. To be a professional in one area does not mean expertise in another—say spiritualism.

Every family in the pew and plenty out in the parish have had strong feelings in this field and they didn't need a bishop to straighten them out. Historically, spiritualism is so riddled with fraud, deceit and foolishness that Pike added nothing new to their knowledge except a suspicion about where he is heading. What next, they are asking?

The true Renaissance man was gifted in art, music and theater, and enjoyed one more quality—when to stop and reflect on his work.

Ann Landers

Teen Age Boy Says Girls' Clothes Issue Invitations

Dear Ann Landers: I have had enough of you. I am a 17-year-old boy who thinks your advice to the girl whose steady boyfriend has "wandering hands" is all wet.

Instead of telling the girl to give the eight-handed idiot "a clop in the chops" or however it is you worded it, why don't you put the blame where it belongs -- on the girl?

No guy in his right mind ever starts to paw a perfect lady. The chick who suddenly finds a guy's hands all over her has asked for it in one way or another.

Sometimes it's not in words, it's the way a girl gets herself together. The miniskirts are a pretty good eyeful when a girl is standing up. When she is sitting down, it's like she is wearing a bikini. No normal guy can look at all that flesh and not get ideas.

Transparent blouses and sweaters, and jeans that fit like sausage casings are worn to get guys excited, and when a normal guy gets excited he wants to do more than just look.

So please, Ann Landers, since you are supposed to give advice, give it to the girls. They are the ones who need it -- TIRED OF BEING TURNED ON

Dear Tired: There's a great deal of truth in what you say and I'm glad you took the time to say it. The moral of the story is simply this, girls: Don't let your clothes issue any invitations you don't mean to fulfill. When you turn a guy on, he can be awfully hard to turn off.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a school teacher who feels parents in this country need a better understanding of where we fit into the lives of their children. Will you please help by printing this letter?

1. Teachers generally choose the profession because they care about children.

2. Teachers try to treat all students alike. If a teacher is unusually suspicious of a child, it is because that child has behaved in a way that has caused the teacher to mistrust him.

3. Teachers do not "give" grades. They only record the quality of the work the student has produced.

4. Children with good manners and a record for achievement will be given preferential consideration and special honors and privileges.

5. Teachers grieve almost as much as parents when a student doesn't make the grade. They feel that they have failed the student and it makes them sad because they love all children and want them to succeed. -- SOMEONE WHO CARES IN AUSTIN

Dear Someone: The teachers you describe are the GOOD teachers. Although there are a great many more good teachers than poor ones, you must agree that not every teacher measures up to your lofty standards.

Confidential to Can't Stand The Sight of Them: Why are you so vehement? Are you perhaps unsure of your own masculinity? Your six-page diatribe suggests deep hostility that must be rooted in something closer to you than you care to admit. Talk your feelings out with a professional and rid yourself of this unhealthy hostility.

Give in or lose him. . .when a guy gives you this line, look out! For tips on how to handle the super sex salesman, check Ann Landers. Read her booklet, "Necking And Petting -- What Are The Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers in care of your newspaper, enclosing 50¢ in coin and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

If You Were the Judge

Uncle Must Pay for Nephew's Abstinence

Luke had a good mind for figures while his nephew Rufus had a good eye for them. The result? While Luke amassed a small fortune from business, Rufus amassed a large stable of chorus girls for pleasure.

Disappointed in Rufus's sense of values, Luke cornered Rufus and offered to pay him $10,000 if he'd stop running around with his chorus girls for two years. Short of funds, Rufus readily accepted the offer. Two years later, however, after abstaining from his more pleasurable relationships, Rufus demanded his $10,000 only to have his Uncle Luke ignore his demand.

"But you promised," Rufus protested. "I gave up a whole way of life to get that money."

"If that was living," was Luke's answer, "I'm a cigar store Indian. Besides, a promise isn't binding unless something is received in exchange. You never gave me anything in exchange for my promise to pay you $10,000."

Determined to get his hard earned money, Rufus took his Uncle Luke to court.

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make Luke fork over the $10,000 to his ex-playboy nephew?

This is how the judge ruled: Yes! The judge held that giving up a legal right is sufficient exchange to make a promise binding; that since Rufus had a legal right to go out with chorus girls, his refraining; from doing so entitled him to the $10,000.

SCOTT COUNTY Ramblings

by Tom Stroup
Director and Agricultural Agent

BENTON - Livestock men with late calves. . .or those preparing for calves this spring. . .are asking if it is advisable to creep-feed calves in commercial herds.

University of Missouri animal husbandmen list a number of conditions under which creep-feeding is likely to pay.

It is usually profitable to creep feed calves dropped in the fall or early winter. . .even though the cows are well fed through the winter.

When pastures are poor for the cow herd during the suckling period, calves should be creep-fed.

In drouth years, creep-feeding increases weaning weights, when pastures are below normal.

Calves should be creep-fed when there are many first-calf heifers or aged cows in the herd.

It pays to creep-feed when the herd has inherently poor milkers.

Finally, calves should be creep-fed if they are to be sold for slaughter at weights ranging from five to 700 pounds. This is often the most profitable way to market low-quality calves such as those that are part dairy stock.

Cotton Soybean Clinic in Kennett

KENNETT - The competitive challenge facing U.S. cotton was never greater. And there is no end in sight to the relentless competition from synthetics and foreign grown cottons. Cotton can better meet this challenge by reducing costs.

How to reduce these costs and increase profits will be one of many topics that farmers in the Kennett area will hear discussed at a cotton-soybean clinic in Kennett next Friday. The clinic will be held from 9:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the American Legion Community building.

Farming experts from the top companies in agriculture will appear here in one of only nine such clinics being held in 1968 in a five-state Mid-South area. This panel will discuss the most modern farming techniques known, and five examples of their successful use in building extra profits of $20 an acre and more for top farmers.

In addition to the production tips, this clinic program contains other pleasant features. Free coffee and doughnuts will be served from 8:30 to 9:15 a.m. for farmers arriving early for the clinic. One of these early arrivers will take home a 12-gauge shotgun from the early-bird give-away. A hot noon meal will also be served at the expense of the clinic sponsors, who are Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, Amchen Products, Inc., Behlen Manufacturing Co. and Shell Chemical Co.

At the end of the final itme on the program - a question and answer period with the panel of experts, one lucky farmer will win a portable television set as a dore prize.

Jury Convicts Man of Theft

CHARLESTON-A circuit court jury convicted Melvin Curtis Hedge of burglary and stealing in a July breakin at the Monsanto Ag Center east of Charleston.

The jury deliberated about an hour before returning the guilty verdict at 5:30 p.m. Judge Marshall Craig gave Hedge 30 days in which to file a motion for a new trial.

Evidence introduced by prosecuting attorney Rod Ashby showed that a base station radio was removed from the center office and was found beside the county road in front of the office.

Hedge's car, with his wife in it, was found about a quarter mile down the road by police and highway patrolmen, who were called to the scene by Barney Reaves, who had noticed unusual activity around the office building. Hedge was later apprehended at the home of his mother-in-law.

Fingerprints on the radio were identified by a highway patrol expert as those of Hedge.

CHAFFEE -- At a special meeting of the board of education Thursday, letters of resignation from Mrs. Fred James, girls physical education intructor, and Fred J. James, superintendent of schools, were read and accepted, effective Jan. 31.

James, who has been superintendent of schools of the Chaffee R-2 school district for the past six years, has accepted the position of superintendent of schools at Hermann.

James will assume his duties there Feb. 1. As soon as suitable housing can be found, Mrs. James and their four children will also move there, he added.

A native of Albany, Mo., James received his Bachelor of Science degree from Northwest State College, Maryville. He earned his masters at SIU. He and his wife have three daughters and a son.

His resignation is a surprise to the community and school board. He was active in community affairs. He was on the community planning commission, and was a past president of the Chaffee park board. He is a member of the Rotary club and the Masonic lodge.

More Snow Slated

Bootheel residents will get a new cover of snow tonight and much colder temperatures Saturday if U.S. weather bureau forecasts are borne out. Two to four inches of snow are predicted ahead of clearing skies and temperatures of five to 10 degrees tonight.

A travelers warning accompanying sleet and ice-covered roads this morning is being continued as accumulations of snow continue to make conditions hazardous for motorists.

Much of the two inches of snow accumulated last weekend remained on the ground today.

A fresh wave of cold air swept across Missouri today and promised to keep things frozen over the weekend.

The Weather Bureau predicted low temperatures tonight as cold as 20 below zero along with intermittent snow which could accumulate to as much as four inches in some areas.

Biting northwest winds up to 30 miles an hour added to the uncomfortable conditions. Most of Missouri may not see any readings above the low 20s Sunday.

Driving conditions were described as treacherous, varying between dry pavement and a mixture of ice and snow.

It hit a low of 5 above early today in Kirksville and St. Joseph but dropped only to 32 in Springfield before the cold front arrived. High marks ranged Friday from 29 in St. Joseph to 29 in Springfield and Columbia.

Funeral Home Refuses Extra For Servicemen

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A St. Charles funeral director who feels an obligation to his country provides one of the few places where servicemen killed in Vietnam can be buried at a cost within the government allowance.

Arthur C. Baue, owner of the Baue Funeral Home, said he was too old to be drafted during World War II and says his son was about to be drafted when the war ended.

An Associated Press survey indicated that government funeral allowances fall short of covering costs of burying servicemen in many sections of the country.

The allowance is $150 if the body is transported to a civilian funeral establishment or church with a military burial later, and $300 if both funeral and burial are to be civilian.

Families interviewed recently reported funerals for their sons and husbands cost from $300 to $700 more than the government provides.

James G. Austin of the Baue mortuary said his employer, "doesn't take one red cent from the family to bury a hero of the Vietnam situation. We do it for free."

However, Austin added, cemetery costs must be paid for by the family and if the family prefers a vault, that too, is extra.

Ice Makes Driving Hazardous, Eight Hurt

Eight were injured in traffic accidents in Southeast Missouri Friday as ice made night driving hazardous.

Three were injured last night at 8:20 p.m. on highway 162, two and one-half miles west of Portageville.

The driver lost control on a hill, ran off the road and his car turned over.

At 11:30 p.m., on the Bloomfield road, four miles west of Cape Girardeau, a 1964 Ford, driven by Michael Blackwell, 22, St. John's, ran off the road and struck a culvert.

Crop Values Dip Slightly

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Missouri farmers produced crops last year valued at about $647 million or 8 per cent less than the 1966 total, it was reported today.

Federal and state agriculture experts pegged value of corn for grain at nearly $224 million, a decline of about $13 million from the previous year.

Value of soybeans raised for beans was estimated at $182 million or a drop of some $48 million.

Experts figured Missouri's 1967 wheat crop was valued at about $73 million, a gain of some $4 million. The hay crop last year was valued at $118 million or about $12 million more than in 1966.

U.S. Air Losses Surpass 1,000 Planes

SAIGON (AP) — Communist troopers overran a village six miles from the big U.S. air base at Bien Hoa today and held it for five hours in an attempt to score a propaganda victory. The U.S. Command reported the loss of four more jets over North Vietnam, boosting the number of combat losses in the war to more than 1,000 aircraft.

U.S. forces drove the enemy out of the village of Tan Uyen, 23 miles north of Saigon, at the break of dawn but the Communists had burned down 11 homes, killed six civilians and eight government soldiers. Eleven civilians and 35 soldiers were wounded. Counterattacking forces killed 19 Communists.

One wounded Red prisoner told U.S. interrogators the attacking force was a North Vietnamese battalion that infiltrated the country in September.

U.S. advisers at Tan Uyen said the Communists shot and killed the village chief and a member of the provincial council. They said the aim of the attack, in which a new market place was destroyed, was to hoist the Viet Cong flag on the district headquarters and photograph it in daylight. Another aim, they added, was to make a show of seizing a village so close to a big American installation.

In Saigon the U.S. Command announced the four U.S. jets were shot down in heavy raids on the North Friday. Some of the attacks were within 10 miles of Red China.

This brought the losses in the war to 1,003 combat planes: 783 over the North and 220 in the South. The figures do not include what the command calls "operation losses" — that is, losses not directly attributed to enemy action, such as engine failures or pilot error.

Hanoi claimed five American jets were shot down Friday, boosting to 15 the number they said they have downed since the monsoon fog and rain cover lifted Wednesday, permitting three straight days of U.S. raids. The U.S. Command has acknowledged seven losses in the three days.

American warplanes, which struck Thursday at antiaircraft batteries on a Chinese-Vietnamese railroad line only nine miles from Red China's frontier, flew just as close to the border Friday to hit a rail bridge.

They avoided the capital of Hanoi and the key port of Haiphong, however, after striking targets near those two cities for two straight days when the monsoon weather broke Wednesday.

The U.S. Command offered no explanation for the omission of targets in Hanoi and Haiphong.

The U.S. State Department, meanwhile, tentatively apologized to Moscow after the Soviet Union charged that an American delayed action bomb had disabled a Soviet freighter Thursday at Haiphong. Press officer Robert J. McCloskey said if the ship was damaged "it was inadvertent and is regretted," but on the basis of information so far available he could neither affirm nor rule out the charge.

North Vietnam charged in a broadcast today that U.S. planes dropped many bombs on Haiphong harbor Thursday, and also hit heavily populated areas of the city.

American raiders struck Friday at Kep air field northeast of Hanoi and concentrated on the northeast rail line from Hanoi to Red China, the line that carries almost all land-borne supplies from Communist bloc countries.

Ground action in South Vietnam again centered on the jungled corridor northwest of Saigon to the Cambodian border and in the far north where the five provinces below the demilitarized zone are under intense military pressure.

Guerrillas attacked U.S. 25th Infantry Division soldiers landing by helicopter 60 miles north of Saigon. The infantrymen reported killing 31 of the enemy and losing 10 killed and 10 wounded.

Red gunners fired some 250 rounds of mortar and rocket grenade fire today on the headquarters of a South Vietnamese infantry regiment 25 miles north of Saigon. The South Vietnamese, who do not announce exact losses, said casualties were light.

Later information indicated that the Viet Cong had hit the village of Tan Uyen in the mortar and rocket barrages and had followed them with a ground assault. One account said about 110 houses in the village had been destroyed or damaged.

There was no further information immediately available on casualties, either military or civilian.

Tan Uyen is only a few miles north of the big U.S.-South Vietnamese airbase at Bien Hoa.

McCarthy Sees No Variance in Nixon-LBJ Race

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D.Minn., said today an election contest between President Johnson and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon would give the voters no choice on the Vietnam war issue.

McCarthy, who plans to contest Johnson in Democratic presidential primaries on the issue, said that the President's administration "has shown itself incapable of ending . . . or slowing down" the conflict. He said the war is taking 60 per cent of the increase in gross national product while the problems of rebuilding the cities, providing jobs and homes go unsolved.

The Minnesota senator expressed his views in a speech prepared for the Coalition for a Democratic Alternative.

He said that if Democrats yield to a call for party unity and support Johnson regardless of their views on Vietnam they may leave the voters to choose between two men who do not differ on the issue.

If Nixon is the Republican nominee, McCarthy said that he might shuffle domestic programs around but that he does not disagree with the President on war policies.

The Minnesota senator said this year's elections will offer a test of "whether the two-party electoral process is at all relevant to the overriding issue that confronts America now: The issue of war and peace."

"1968 will also provide a test of whether the present administration, elected on a platform o restraint, will be held accountable by those who nominated and elected it," he said.

"Under the institutions we have developed, the President of the United States can be held accountable only once every four years. Such a year is upon us and we cannot evade the issue any longer.

"Shall we allow 60 per cent of our increase in gross national product in 1968 to be consumed by a war in Asia, or dedicate our resources and our manpower to rebuilding our cities to provide a decent home for every family and a job to every worker and to meet more fully our other responsibilities around the world?"

McCarthy said some Americans "including some at the highest levels of government and policies" have not spoke out on Vietnam.

Next Patient Chosen As Blaiberg Improves

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP)— Dr. Philip Blaiberg was reported in satisfactory condition and cheerful today after his heart transplant operation. The head of the operating team said he now wants to do a heart transplant on an African.

On the fifth day with his new heart, the 58-year-old dentist is "enjoying life better now than before the operation," Dr. Christiaan N. Barnard said. "Even if he only lives for days, he's had that. We've given him something."

Barnard told a news conference he now wants to perform an operation on an African suffering from a disease that affects only the heart and leaves the rest of the body free of complications usually found in whites. Africans are segregated in white-ruled South Africa.

No Africans have been involved in the first two human heart transplants performed here, although the heart of a mulatto man was used in Blaiberg's operation.

This heart, taken from the body of Clive Haupt, 24, after he died from brain hemorrhage, was grafted into the body of Blaiberg.

Mrs. Blaiberg attended the funeral today of Haupt at St. Luke's Anglican church in suburban Salt River, and sent a bouquet of carnations to his widow. Haupt died Tuesday three months after marriage. Also present at the funeral were Dr. Barnard and Mayor Gerald Ferry of Cape Town.

Thousands of colored South Africans surged around the church and the graveside and though they were orderly for the most part police used dogs to keep control.

As a mulatto, Haupt was classified as "Cape colored" under this country's strict law of apartheid, or racial segregation.

Mrs. Blaiberg said she and her husband planned to give Mrs. Haupt a share of the profits from the sale of exclusive pictures and interviews to the National Broadcasting Co.

NBC said in a court memorandum that it would pay the Blaibergs $25,000 for the publication of the "first exclusive film or pictures of the operation," a $9,000 fee for exclusive films and interviews before the operation and $16,000 for similar exclusive coverage after it. However, no NBC pictures were made of the operation, apparently nullifying that part of the contract.

A special fund set up to aid the father and two brothers of Denise Darvall, whose heart was used in the world's first transplant operation in Louis Washkansky, has raised more than $7,000.

Doctors said Friday that no abnormalities have been detected in Blaiberg's condition and that changes in his cardiograph Thursday that seemed to indicate a reaction against the new heart had disappeared.

Blaiberg took his first semi-solid food— a soft boiled egg and some corn flakes— and was described as being in an excellent mood.

"He enjoys a chat," a spokesman said.

Polar Air Surge Grips Midwest

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A new blast of polar air plagued a vast stretch of the nation's midsection Saturday. Snow, sleet and freezing rain posed treacherous driving conditions for a 14-state area from the Texas Panhandle to Maryland.

The mercury plunged to 49 below in northwestern Minnesota. Temperatures were expected to drop to zero or below tonight over a 23-state area from Nevada and Montana to the Great Lakes region.

The new surge of arctic air is the third this week to numb the midcontinent. By contrast, winds from the ocean kept temperatures relatively mild in Alaska. Anchorage and Juneau had high readings Friday of 26 and Fairbanks 17.

But a bone-chilling low of -49 was recorded at Roseau, Minn. The -44 recorded at International Falls, Minn., tied the record low for the date in that city.

Freezing rain slicked highways as far south as South Carolina and Georgia in the East.

An earlier cold snap lingered over the Great Lakes and centered its punch on northern New York and New England. The temperature in the Twin Mountain, N.H., region dropped to -40 for the second time this week. Massena, N.Y., on the Canadian border, had a low of -20.

Parts of the Midwest warmed up to the 20s and 30s Friday for the first time in a week, but the Weather Bureau indicated the same regions would chill down to zero or below by Sunday morning.

A similar respite from winter miseries already was wiped out for residents of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee, hit earlier this week by more than three days of sleet and freezing rain.

Hazardous driving warnings were in effect for these states as well as Kansas and Missouri. Forecasters said the glaze warnings probably would be extended into Southern Illinois and Kentucky, the latter hit hardest by the New Year's ice storm that lasted into Thursday.

Light sleet iced over portions of Kansas as the wind-blown cold wave engulfed the midcontinent. Zero temperatures were expected for the same area tonight. Heavy ice formed on trees, shrubs and power lines in the Little Rock-Pine Bluff area of Arkansas.

Thieu Invites Hanoi To Back up Words

SAIGON (AP) — Reacting to statements from Hanoi last week seen by some observers as a softer approach to peace talks, South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu said today "everyone is waiting for a...much clearer position from Hanoi." But he added that the bombing of North Vietnam could not be stopped without reciprocal action from Hanoi.

Thieu's comments were basically in line with the U.S. position on the recent Hanoi statements, as voiced by Secretary of State Dean Rusk in a Washington news conference Thursday. Rusk, too, said the allies need to find out what Hanoi means; however, the secretary declined to say whether a bombing halt was possible without Communist reciprocity.

Thieu also told the newsmen who questioned him that his government welcomes "any movement or any informal talks from any government to bring peace for Vietnam," But he added, "I believe negotiations should be the main task between the Saigon government and the Hanoi government."

His comments came in reply to this question: "If the United States does stop bombing North Vietnam and Hanoi responds by satisfactory reciprocal action, do you have any objection to the United States talking unilaterally to the Hanoi authorities?"

His answer was not direct, but indicated he felt the United States would not begin talks with North Vietnam if Hanoi set conditions unacceptable to the Saigon government.

Complicating the picture is the question of recognition. North Vietnam considers the Thieu government a puppet regime set up by the United States and considers the Viet Cong the sole legal authority in South Vietnam. The Saigon government refuses to accord any legal status to the Viet Cong, but has said it is willing to talk with the North.

In his talks with the newsmen, Thieu also praised President Johnson for "a good gesture" in sending U.S. Ambassador Chester Bowles to Cambodia Monday for talks with ruling prince Norodom Sihanouk on Communist troops' use of Cambodia as a sanctuary from fighting in Vietnam.

Thieu also said it was "a good gesture" on Sihanouk's part to take a closer look at the problem of Communist sanctuary in Cambodia.

Prince Sihanouk indicated in responses to questions sent to him by the New York Times that he could not consider "cooperation" with the United States in investigating or rooting out Communist sanctuary camps in Cambodia. Said Sihanouk: "The only 'control' that we may accept in dealing with the Communists — and which is unassailable at law— is that which the Geneva agreements offer us, that of the ICC (the International Control Commission, set up to carry out the 1954 Geneva agreements)."

The prince said he would favor strengthening the ICC teams in Cambodia that probe for violations of Cambodia's borders by Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units. He also indicated that diplomatic relations could be resumed with the United States immediately if Bowles "brought recognition of our present borders (which would probably mean no "hot pursuit" could be attempted by U.S. troops without Sihanouk's consent."

But, Sihanouk said, even if no border recognition is forthcoming, "Bowles' mission will at least permit, if Mr. Johnson is still willing to prevent aggression against our country, a reduction in tension between the United States and Cambodia.

Salt Curbs Slickness of City Streets

City streets in the downtown area and at the main intersections are in relatively good shape today despite the freezing rain and sleet that left glass-slick surfaces throughout the area this morning.

The downtown streets and the major intersections were salted early today by city street department workers, but traffic is moving adequately, City Manager W. Raymert Miller.

Conditions were still dangerous and all motorists are urged to drive with caution, Miller said this morning.

No accidents occurred in the city this morning, police reported.

One accident occurred at 5:10 p.m. Friday at Main and Malone. An automobile driven by Mrs. Estelle Hampton, route two, Sikeston, struck a car driven by Mrs. Joyce Murphy, 716 Vernon, during the rush hour.

Mrs. Hampton was charged with failure to have her vehicle under control, Officer Robert Johnson reported.

School Invaded By Spiders to Reopen Tuesday

MATTOON, Ill. (AP) — Officials at Mattoon High School have announced that classes will resume Tuesday following an invasion of dangerous brown recluse spiders that forced the closing of the school.

Supt. John G. Warg closed the school Thursday afternoon after a biology teacher found one of the spiders in a desk drawer at the school. Exterminators were called.

The exterminators reported Friday they found the spiders throughout the school and said thousands of them had invaded halls and lockers in the building.

Stevenson Moore III, an agricultural entomologist at the University of Illinois, said the spiders were not "highly fatal," but their bite caused intense pain.

Microwave Course Will Be Offered

An adult night education class in electronics microwave will begin Wednesday at the high school, Jim Cornett, director of vocational education, said.

The 15-week course will be taught from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m. Wednesdays. Instruction will include a microwave principles, transmission and reception and associated circuitry.

Anti-U.S. Signs Greet Humphrey

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — About 300 university students hanged President Johnson in effigy today and chanted anti-American slogans while waiting for Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey to come and talk to them.

The students carried dozens of signs assailing the U.S. role in Vietnam, such as "Americans hands are red with the blood of Vietnamese children."

Humphrey, delayed by a two-hour meeting with Emperor Haile Selassie, canceled plans to address the students. This caused one student leader to say: "We are very disappointed the vice president is not coming. We just wanted him to know how we felt."

Humphrey went to the audience with the emperor after a major address in which he said President Johnson's administration refused to retreat before the "new isolationism" caused by congressional cuts in U.S. foreign aid.

The vice president said the administration will take its case for more foreign aid directly to the American people.

JEFFERSON CITY (AP) — Frank F. Haggerty, 67, of Jefferson City has decided to try again for the Democratic nomination for state treasurer.

He filed Friday after resigning from the revenue department's auto registration division to make the race.

Haggerty ran second to Milton Carpenter in the 1960 primary.

Two other Democrats also have filed — William E. Robinson of Jefferson city, the state party committee's treasurer, and Lewis E. Morris of Jefferson City, a retired Army officer.

Haggerty is a former Jackson County circuit clerk, has worked in several state offices and has been in the hotel and investment business.

Woman Missionary Describes 3-Day Ordeal

EDITOR's NOTE: For three days Miss Jean Laing, 35, an American missionary teacher, was lost in the central Malaysian jungles with three Malaysian hiking companions. They were found Friday by aborigine tribesmen. All were reported in good condition today. From her hospital bed, where she is recuperating from minor bruises and exhaustion, Miss Laing relates her ordeal.

By JEAN LAING

CAMERON HIGHLANDS, Malaysia (AP) — I had climbed the mile-high Mt. Beremban five times since arriving in Malaysia two years ago. It would generally take only about three hours to make the trek up to the top and back to Dalat School, where I teach.

On Tuesday I invited three children from a family that lives near the school to come along with me for another hike up the hill. We left at 9 a.m. and were to be back in time for lunch.

We got to the top of the hill on schedule and then decided to explore a different way down, but we soon became puzzled, as we found so many paths in front of us.

We picked one and started following it, but after walking about two miles we realized it was not the correct one because the jungle was getting thicker and thicker and the trees taller and taller.

We decided to try to return to the top of the hill, but we couldn't find the way because again there were so many paths made by previous hikers. We stumbled many times and got minor cuts.

It was very dark then, although it was only 4 p.m., and we felt cold and hungry.

Young Balbir Singh— he's only 11— started crying, and he just wouldn't stop, although I and his older brother, Manjit, 12, and sister, Sarjit Kaur, 14, did our best to comfort him.

We decided to spend the night in the jungle, and we huddled together to keep warm. We had no warm clothes to protect us from the cold nights, when the temperature is about 50 degrees.

Suddenly, about 10:30 p.m., we heard some people shouting our names. We were sure it was a search party. We heard them whistling and we heard dogs barking.

We started shouting back to them, screaming our lungs out, but we couldn't make ourselves heard. Slowly, we could hear the searchers' voices fade away.

We passed the first night in the jungle, as we did the others, without sleep, partly because it was so cold and we were scared of wild animals, such as tigers. There also were a lot of mosquitos.

I kept praying to God all the time to keep the wild animals away from us and to lead us to safety.

The next day, Wednesday, we started downhill and came across a river.

The first thing I did was to make the children drink water out of the stream. They didn't want to because the water was dirty. But I forced them to drink it because I knew they needed water to survive. Since we had no food with us, the children had become very hungry, although fortunately I did not.

We started following the river upstream, hoping to find houses or aborigine settlements. But it was in vain, and so we went back to the jungle for the second night because it was too cold by the side of the river.

I knew God was watching and seeing us, but I didn't know why He was taking so long to lead us out.

On Thursday we decided to follow the river downstream, and we soon came across what seemed to be tiger footmarks. The children were very frightened. Although exhausted, we kept on going and praying.

By Friday morning, I was literally crawling along the river stream, and the children were pulling me. I could hardly go another step. I knew I wouldn't have been able to survive another night.

I understand the doctors are saying I held the group together mentally while the children helped me physically. All I can say is that the children certainly helped me.

At about noon we came across an opening in the jungle, so I sent Manjit ahead.

As soon as he reached the clearing, he became excited and started shouting in Malay, "too long, tolong," or "help, help."

He had spotted a group of 15 aborigines on the other side of the river. The aborigines rushed over to us and quickly started a fire and cooked us some rice and fish that they had with them.

I knew God had answered our prayers.

The two boys finished their meal very quickly. But the girl and I could not eat so fast because we were too exhausted and it took us one hour to eat a plate of rice and fish.

The aborigines cut some branches and jungle vines to make an improvised stretcher for me because I was too weak to walk.

With the children walking alongside me, I was carried for one hour to a nearby aborigine settlement. After a short rest, we set out again, and two hours later we reached a tea plantation where police met us and took us to the hospital.

Although mountain climbing has been my favorite pastime, I have no interest in it at the moment and will not go out out again unless I know the place well.

Right now, I'm just thankful to be alive.

More Snow Slated

Bootheel residents will get a new cover of snow tonight and much colder temperatures Saturday if U.S. weather bureau forecasts are borne out. Two to four inches of snow are predicted ahead of clearing skies and temperatures of five to 10 degrees tonight.

A travelers warning accompanying sleet and ice-covered roads this morning is being continued as accumulations of snow continue to make conditions hazardous for motorists.

Much of the two inches of snow accumulated last weekend remained on the ground today.

A fresh wave of cold air swept across Missouri today and promised to keep things frozen over the weekend.

The Weather Bureau predicted low temperatures tonight as cold as 20 below zero along with intermittent snow which could accumulate to as much as four inches in some areas.

Biting northwest winds up to 30 miles an hour added to the uncomfortable conditions. Most of Missouri may not see any readings above the low 20s Sunday.

Driving conditions were described as treacherous, varying between dry pavement and a mixture of ice and snow.

It hit a low of 5 above early today in Kirksville and St. Joseph but dropped only to 32 in Springfield before the cold front arrived. High marks ranged Friday from 29 in St. Joseph to 29 in Springfield and Columbia.

Funeral Home Refuses Extra For Servicemen

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A St. Charles funeral director who feels an obligation to his country provides one of the few places where servicemen killed in Vietnam can be buried at a cost within the government allowance.

Arthur C. Baue, owner of the Baue Funeral Home, said he was too old to be drafted during World War II and says his son was about to be drafted when the war ended.

An Associated Press survey indicated that government funeral allowances fall short of covering costs of burying servicemen in many sections of the country.

The allowance is $150 if the body is transported to a civilian funeral establishment or church with a military burial later, and $300 if both funeral and burial are to be civilian.

Families interviewed recently reported funerals for their sons and husbands cost from $300 to $700 more than the government provides.

James G. Austin of the Baue mortuary said his employer, "doesn't take one red cent from the family to bury a hero of the Vietnam situation. We do it for free."

However, Austin added, cemetery costs must be paid for by the family and if the family prefers a vault, that too, is extra.

Crop Values Dip Slightly

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Missouri farmers produced crops last year valued at about $647 million or 8 per cent less than the 1966 total, it was reported today.

Federal and state agriculture experts pegged value of corn for grain at nearly $224 million, a decline of about $13 million from the previous year.

Value of soybeans raised for beans was estimated at $182 million or a drop of some $48 million.

Experts figured Missouri's 1967 wheat crop was valued at about $73 million, a gain of some $4 million. The hay crop last year was valued at $118 million or about $12 million more than in 1966.

U.S. Air Losses Surpass 1,000 Planes

SAIGON (AP) — Communist troopers overran a village six miles from the big U.S. air base at Bien Hoa today and held it for five hours in an attempt to score a propaganda victory. The U.S. Command reported the loss of four more jets over North Vietnam, boosting the number of combat losses in the war to more than 1,000 aircraft.

U.S. forces drove the enemy out of the village of Tan Uyen, 23 miles north of Saigon, at the break of dawn but the Communists had burned down 11 homes, killed six civilians and eight government soldiers. Eleven civilians and 35 soldiers were wounded. Counterattacking forces killed 19 Communists.

One wounded Red prisoner told U.S. interrogators the attacking force was a North Vietnamese battalion that infiltrated the country in September.

U.S. advisers at Tan Uyen said the Communists shot and killed the village chief and a member of the provincial council. They said the aim of the attack, in which a new market place was destroyed, was to hoist the Viet Cong flag on the district headquarters and photograph it in daylight. Another aim, they added, was to make a show of seizing a village so close to a big American installation.

In Saigon the U.S. Command announced the four U.S. jets were shot down in heavy raids on the North Friday. Some of the attacks were within 10 miles of Red China.

This brought the losses in the war to 1,003 combat planes: 783 over the North and 220 in the South. The figures do not include what the command calls "operation losses" — that is, losses not directly attributed to enemy action, such as engine failures or pilot error.

Hanoi claimed five American jets were shot down Friday, boosting to 15 the number they said they have downed since the monsoon fog and rain cover lifted Wednesday, permitting three straight days of U.S. raids. The U.S. Command has acknowledged seven losses in the three days.

American warplanes, which struck Thursday at antiaircraft batteries on a Chinese-Vietnamese railroad line only nine miles from Red China's frontier, flew just as close to the border Friday to hit a rail bridge.

They avoided the capital of Hanoi and the key port of Haiphong, however, after striking targets near those two cities for two straight days when the monsoon weather broke Wednesday.

The U.S. Command offered no explanation for the omission of targets in Hanoi and Haiphong.

The U.S. State Department, meanwhile, tentatively apologized to Moscow after the Soviet Union charged that an American delayed action bomb had disabled a Soviet freighter Thursday at Haiphong. Press officer Robert J. McCloskey said if the ship was damaged "it was inadvertent and is regretted," but on the basis of information so far available he could neither affirm nor rule out the charge.

North Vietnam charged in a broadcast today that U.S. planes dropped many bombs on Haiphong harbor Thursday, and also hit heavily populated areas of the city.

American raiders struck Friday at Kep air field northeast of Hanoi and concentrated on the northeast rail line from Hanoi to Red China, the line that carries almost all land-borne supplies from Communist bloc countries.

Ground action in South Vietnam again centered on the jungled corridor northwest of Saigon to the Cambodian border and in the far north where the five provinces below the demilitarized zone are under intense military pressure.

Guerrillas attacked U.S. 25th Infantry Division soldiers landing by helicopter 60 miles north of Saigon. The infantrymen reported killing 31 of the enemy and losing 10 killed and 10 wounded.

Red gunners fired some 250 rounds of mortar and rocket grenade fire today on the headquarters of a South Vietnamese infantry regiment 25 miles north of Saigon. The South Vietnamese, who do not announce exact losses, said casualties were light.

Later information indicated that the Viet Cong had hit the village of Tan Uyen in the mortar and rocket barrages and had followed them with a ground assault. One account said about 110 houses in the village had been destroyed or damaged.

There was no further information immediately available on casualties, either military or civilian.

Tan Uyen is only a few miles north of the big U.S.-South Vietnamese airbase at Bien Hoa.

McCarthy Sees No Variance in Nixon-LBJ Race

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., said today an election contest between President Johnson and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon would give the voters no choice on the Vietnam war issue.

McCarthy, who plans to contest Johnson in Democratic presidential primaries on the issue, said that the President's administration "has shown itself incapable of ending . . . or slowing down" the conflict. He said the war is taking 60 per cent of the increase in gross national product while the problems of rebuilding the cities, providing jobs and homes go unsolved.

The Minnesota senator expressed his views in a speech prepared for the Coalition for a Democratic Alternative.

He said that if Democrats yield to a call for party unity and support Johnson regardless of their views on Vietnam they may leave the voters to choose between two men who do not differ on the issue.

If Nixon is the Republican nominee, McCarthy said that he might shuffle domestic programs around but that he does not disagree with the President on war policies.

The Minnesota senator said this year's elections will offer a test of "whether the two-party electoral process is at all relevant to the overriding issue that confronts America now: The issue of war and peace."

"1968 will also provide a test of whether the present administration, elected on a platform of restraint, will be held accountable by those who nominated and elected it," he said.

"Under the institutions we have developed, the President of the United States can be held accountable only once every four years. Such a year is upon us and we cannot evade the issue any longer.

"Shall we allow 60 per cent of our increase in gross national product in 1968 to be consumed by a war in Asia, or dedicate our resources and our manpower to rebuilding our cities to provide a decent home for every family and a job to every worker and to meet more fully our other responsibilities around the world?"

McCarthy said some Americans "including some at the highest levels of government and policies" have not spoke out on Vietnam.

Next Patient Chosen As Blaiberg Improves

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP)— Dr. Philip Blaiberg was reported in satisfactory condition and cheerful today after his heart transplant operation. The head of the operating team said he now wants to do a heart transplant on an African.

On the fifth day with his new heart, the 58-year-old dentist is "enjoying life better now than before the operation," Dr. Christiaan N. Barnard said. "Even if he only lives for days, he's had that. We've given him something."

Barnard told a news conference he now wants to perform an operation on an African suffering from a disease that affects only the heart and leaves the rest of the body free of complications usually found in whites. Africans are segregated in white-ruled South Africa.

No Africans have been involved in the first two human heart transplants performed here, although the heart of a mulatto man was used in Blaiberg's operation.

This heart, taken from the body of Clive Haupt, 24, after he died from brain hemorrhage, was grafted into the body of Blaiberg.

Mrs. Blaiberg attended the funeral today of Haupt at St. Luke's Anglican church in suburban Salt River, and sent a bouquet of carnations to his widow. Haupt died Tuesday three months after marriage. Also present at the funeral were Dr. Barnard and Mayor Gerald Ferry of Cape Town.

Thousands of colored South Africans surged around the church and the graveside and though they were orderly for the most part police used dogs to keep control.

As a mulatto, Haupt was classified as "Cape colored" under this country's strict law of apartheid, or racial segregation.

Mrs. Blaiberg said she and her husband planned to give Mrs. Haupt a share of the profits from the sale of exclusive pictures and interviews to the National Broadcasting Co.

NBC said in a court memorandum that it would pay the Blaibergs $25,000 for the publication of the "first exclusive film or pictures of the operation," a $9,000 fee for exclusive films and interviews before the operation and $16,000 for similar exclusive coverage after it. However, no NBC pictures were made of the operation, apparently nullifying that part of the contract.

A special fund set up to aid the father and two brothers of Denise Darvall, whose heart was used in the world's first transplant operation in Louis Washkansky, has raised more than $7,000.

Doctors said Friday that no abnormalities have been detected in Blaiberg's condition and that changes in his cardiograph Thursday that seemed to indicate a reaction against the new heart had disappeared.

Blaiberg took his first semi-solid food— a soft boiled egg and some corn flakes— and was described as being in an excellent mood.

"He enjoys a chat," a spokesman said.

Polar Air Surge Grips Midwest

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A new blast of polar air plagued a vast stretch of the nation's midsection Saturday. Snow, sleet and freezing rain posed treacherous driving conditions for a 14-state area from the Texas Panhandle to Maryland.

The mercury plunged to 49 below in northwestern Minnesota. Temperatures were expected to drop to zero or below tonight over a 23-state area from Nevada and Montana to the Great Lakes region.

The new surge of arctic air is the third this week to numb the midcontinent. By contrast, winds from the ocean kept temperatures relatively mild in Alaska. Anchorage and Juneau had high readings Friday of 26 and Fairbanks 17.

But a bone-chilling low of -49 was recorded at Roseau, Minn. The -44 recorded at International Falls, Minn., tied the record low for the date in that city.

Freezing rain slicked highways as far south as South Carolina and Georgia in the East.

An earlier cold snap lingered over the Great Lakes and centered its punch on northern New York and New England. The temperature in the Twin Mountain, N.H., region dropped to -40 for the second time this week. Massena, N.Y., on the Canadian border, had a low of -20.

Parts of the Midwest warmed up to the 20s and 30s Friday for the first time in a week, but the Weather Bureau indicated the same regions would chill down to zero or below by Sunday morning.

A similar respite from winter miseries already was wiped out for residents of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee, hit earlier this week by more than three days of sleet and freezing rain.

Hazardous driving warnings were in effect for these states as well as Kansas and Missouri. Forecasters said the glaze warnings probably would be extended into Southern Illinois and Kentucky, the latter hit hardest by the New Year's ice storm that lasted into Thursday.

Light sleet iced over portions of Kansas as the wind-blown cold wave engulfed the midcontinent. Zero temperatures were expected for the same area tonight. Heavy ice formed on trees, shrubs and power lines in the Little Rock-Pine Bluff area of Arkansas.

Thieu Invites Hanoi To Back up Words

SAIGON (AP) — Reacting to statements from Hanoi last week seen by some observers as a softer approach to peace talks, South Vietnam's President Nguyen Van Thieu said today "everyone is waiting for a...much clearer position from Hanoi." But he added that the bombing of North Vietnam could not be stopped without reciprocal action from Hanoi.

Thieu's comments were basically in line with the U.S. position on the recent Hanoi statements, as voiced by Secretary of State Dean Rusk in a Washington news conference Thursday. Rusk, too, said the allies need to find out what Hanoi means; however, the secretary declined to say whether a bombing halt was possible without Communist reciprocity.

Thieu also told the newsmen who questioned him that his government welcomes "any movement or any informal talks from any government to bring peace for Vietnam," But he added, "I believe negotiations should be the main task between the Saigon government and the Hanoi government."

His comments came in reply to this question: "If the United States does stop bombing North Vietnam and Hanoi responds by satisfactory reciprocal action, do you have any objection to the United States talking unilaterally to the Hanoi authorities?"

His answer was not direct, but indicated he felt the United States would not begin talks with North Vietnam if Hanoi set conditions unacceptable to the Saigon government.

Complicating the picture is the question of recognition. North Vietnam considers the Thieu government a puppet regime set up by the United States and considers the Viet Cong the sole legal authority in South Vietnam. The Saigon government refuses to accord any legal status to the Viet Cong, but has said it is willing to talk with the North.

In his talks with the newsmen, Thieu also praised President Johnson for "a good gesture" in sending U.S. Ambassador Chester Bowles to Cambodia Monday for talks with ruling prince Norodom Sihanouk on Communist troops' use of Cambodia as a sanctuary from fighting in Vietnam.

Thieu also said it was "a good gesture" on Sihanouk's part to take a closer look at the problem of Communist sanctuary in Cambodia.

Prince Sihanouk indicated in responses to questions sent to him by the New York Times that he could not consider "cooperation" with the United States in investigating or rooting out Communist sanctuary camps in Cambodia. Said Sihanouk: "The only 'control' that we may accept in dealing with the Communists — and which is unassailable at law— is that which the Geneva agreements offer us, that of the ICC (the International Control Commission, set up to carry out the 1954 Geneva agreements)."

The prince said he would favor strengthening the ICC teams in Cambodia that probe for violations of Cambodia's borders by Viet Cong and North Vietnamese units. He also indicated that diplomatic relations could be resumed with the United States immediately if Bowles "brought recognition of our present borders (which would probably mean no "hot pursuit" could be attempted by U.S. troops without Sihanouk's consent."

But, Sihanouk said, even if no border recognition is forthcoming, "Bowles' mission will at least permit, if Mr. Johnson is still willing to prevent aggression against our country, a reduction in tension between the United States and Cambodia.

Salt Curbs Slickness of City Streets

City streets in the downtown area and at the main intersections are in relatively good shape today despite the freezing rain and sleet that left glass-slick surfaces throughout the area this morning.

The downtown streets and the major intersections were salted early today by city street department workers, but traffic is moving adequately, City Manager W. Raymert Miller.

Conditions were still dangerous and all motorists are urged to drive with caution, Miller said this morning.

No accidents occurred in the city this morning, police reported.

One accident occurred at 5:10 p.m. Friday at Main and Malone. An automobile driven by Mrs. Estelle Hampton, route two, Sikeston, struck a car driven by Mrs. Joyce Murphy, 716 Vernon, during the rush hour.

Mrs. Hampton was charged with failure to have her vehicle under control, Officer Robert Johnson reported.

Anti-U.S. Signs Greet Humphrey

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — About 300 university students hanged President Johnson in effigy today and chanted anti-American slogans while waiting for Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey to come and talk to them.

The students carried dozens of signs assailing the U.S. role in Vietnam, such as "Americans hands are red with the blood of Vietnamese children."

Humphrey, delayed by a two-hour meeting with Emperor Haile Selassie, canceled plans to address the students. This caused one student leader to say: "We are very disappointed the vice president is not coming. We just wanted him to know how we felt."

Humphrey went to the audience with the emperor after a major address in which he said President Johnson's administration refused to retreat before the "new isolationism" caused by congressional cuts in U.S. foreign aid.

The vice president said the administration will take its case for more foreign aid directly to the American people.

Haggerty Files For Treasurer

JEFFERSON CITY (AP) — Frank F. Haggerty, 67, of Jefferson City has decided to try again for the Democratic nomination for state treasurer.

He filed Friday after resigning from the revenue department's auto registration division to make the race.

Haggerty ran second to Milton Carpenter in the 1960 primary.

Two other Democrats also have filed — William E. Robinson of Jefferson city, the state party committee's treasurer, and Lewis E. Morris of Jefferson City, a retired Army officer.

Haggerty is a former Jackson County circuit clerk, has worked in several state offices and has been in the hotel and investment business.

School Invaded By Spiders to Reopen Tuesday

MATTOON, Ill. (AP) — Officials at Mattoon High School have announced that classes will resume Tuesday following an invasion of dangerous brown recluse spiders that forced the closing of the school.

Supt. John G. Warg closed the school Thursday afternoon after a biology teacher found one of the spiders in a desk drawer at the school. Exterminators were called.

The exterminators reported Friday they found the spiders throughout the school and said thousands of them had invaded halls and lockers in the building.

Stevenson Moore III, an agricultural entomologist at the University of Illinois, said the spiders were not "highly fatal," but their bite caused intense pain.

Woman Missionary Describes 3-Day Ordeal

EDITOR's NOTE: For three days Miss Jean Laing, 35, an American missionary teacher, was lost in the central Malaysian jungles with three Malaysian hiking companions. They were found Friday by aborigine tribesmen. All were reported in good condition today. From her hospital bed, where she is recuperating from minor bruises and exhaustion, Miss Laing relates her ordeal.

By JEAN LAING

CAMERON HIGHLANDS, Malaysia (AP) — I had climbed the mile-high Mt. Beremban five times since arriving in Malaysia two years ago. It would generally take only about three hours to make the trek up to the top and back to Dalat School, where I teach.

On Tuesday I invited three children from a family that lives near the school to come along with me for another hike up the hill. We left at 9 a.m. and were to be back in time for lunch.

We got to the top of the hill on schedule and then decided to explore a different way down, but we soon became puzzled, as we found so many paths in front of us.

We picked one and started following it, but after walking about two miles we realized it was not the correct one because the jungle was getting thicker and thicker and the trees taller and taller.

We decided to try to return to the top of the hill, but we couldn't find the way because again there were so many paths made by previous hikers. We stumbled many times and got minor cuts.

It was very dark then, although it was only 4 p.m., and we felt cold and hungry.

Young Balbir Singh— he's only 11— started crying, and he just wouldn't stop, although I and his older brother, Manjit, 12, and sister, Sarjit Kaur, 14, did our best to comfort him.

We decided to spend the night in the jungle, and we huddled together to keep warm. We had no warm clothes to protect us from the cold nights, when the temperature is about 50 degrees.

Suddenly, about 10:30 p.m., we heard some people shouting our names. We were sure it was a search party. We heard them whistling and we heard dogs barking.

We started shouting back to them, screaming our lungs out, but we couldn't make ourselves heard. Slowly, we could hear the searchers' voices fade away.

We passed the first night in the jungle, as we did the others, without sleep, partly because it was so cold and we were scared of wild animals, such as tigers. There also were a lot of mosquitos.

I kept praying to God all the time to keep the wild animals away from us and to lead us to safety.

The next day, Wednesday, we started downhill and came across a river.

The first thing I did was to make the children drink water out of the stream. They didn't want to because the water was dirty. But I forced them to drink it because I knew they needed water to survive. Since we had no food with us, the children had become very hungry, although fortunately I did not.

We started following the river upstream, hoping to find houses or aborigine settlements. But it was in vain, and so we went back to the jungle for the second night because it was too cold by the side of the river.

I knew God was watching and seeing us, but I didn't know why He was taking so long to lead us out.

On Thursday we decided to follow the river downstream, and we soon came across what seemed to be tiger footmarks. The children were very frightened. Although exhausted, we kept on going and praying.

By Friday morning, I was literally crawling along the river stream, and the children were pulling me. I could hardly go another step. I knew I wouldn't have been able to survive another night.

I understand the doctors are saying I held the group together mentally while the children helped me physically. All I can say is that the children certainly helped me.

At about noon we came across an opening in the jungle, so I sent Manjit ahead.

As soon as he reached the clearing, he became excited and started shouting in Malay, "too long, tolong," or "help, help."

He had spotted a group of 15 aborigines on the other side of the river. The aborigines rushed over to us and quickly started a fire and cooked us some rice and fish that they had with them.

I knew God had answered our prayers.

The two boys finished their meal very quickly. But the girl and I could not eat so fast because we were too exhausted and it took us one hour to eat a plate of rice and fish.

The aborigines cut some branches and jungle vines to make an improvised stretcher for me because I was too weak to walk.

With the children walking alongside me, I was carried for one hour to a nearby aborigine settlement. After a short rest, we set out again, and two hours later we reached a tea plantation where police met us and took us to the hospital.

Although mountain climbing has been my favorite pastime, I have no interest in it at the moment and will not go out out again unless I know the place well.

Right now, I'm just thankful to be alive.

LOUISVILLE'S HOUSING ORDINANCE

Twenty-one states and numerous cities have laid the basis for an attack on housing discrimination by enacting open housing legislation. A major effort was made in 1966 to put through federal legislation of this kind -- proscribing discrimination in the sale or rental of housing on the basis of race, color, creed, or national origin -- but it failed in the U. S. Senate. This year the emphasis has been at state and local levels.

The latest example is an open housing ordinance passed by the Louisville, Ky., Board of Aldermen which will become effective today. The ordinance makes it illegal to refuse to sell or rent on the above-named basis. The only exceptions are apartments of four units or less if the owner or a member of the family lives in the building, and rooming houses occupied by the owner or a member of his family. The measure also prohibits discrimination by financial institutions and realtors in housing transactions.

The ordinance provides fines of up to $100. Mayor Kenneth A. Schmied refused to sign the measure because, he said, it gave too much power to the Louisville and Jefferson County Human Relations Commission. The commission is empowered to investigate racial discrimination in housing, conduct hearings, and impose fines or seek court orders to enforce the law. Many an open housing law has failed to effectively increase residential integration because of lack of enforcement.

FIRE BUTLER

Missouri Industrial Commission Chairman James J. Butler should be dismissed.

He was the guiding force in an attempt to gouge Missouri taxpayers by setting St. Louis steamfitter pay scales as the wage rate for Jefferson City public construction work, even though local contractors had been paying a lower scale under a local agreement.

Butler, who has close ties with the St. Louis steamfitters, was a poor choice in the beginning. When appointed, he was a member of a Clayton law firm headed by the late John O'Connell Hough, a close associate and attorney for John L. Lawler, assistant business manager of St. Louis Steamfitters Local 562.

The controversy began last spring when The Globe-Democrat disclosed that the commission had set the St. Louis Local 562 pay rates in Jefferson City -- $2.12 an hour more than contractors on private projects were paying under their agreement with the Jefferson City local.

In ruling that the Missouri Industrial Commission's decision on the highway pay scale should be invalidated, Cole County Circuit Judge James T. Riley said the commission had based its wage determination solely on steamfitter pay at the construction site of the Chesebrough-Pond, Inc., manufacturing plant in Jefferson City involving mechanical work of $1.3 million.

It failed to consider that the Jefferson City pay scale had been paid on $3.9 million worth of public projects between May 1, 1966, and April 19, 1967.

The lower pay scale also was paid on private work totaling $856,984 during this same period.

By law, wage determinations by the commission should be made on all projects involving use of public funds.

It is obvious that the commission headed by Butler failed to observe the procedure spelled out by the law.

Butler, who tried to defend this gouge of Missouri taxpayers even after it was exposed by this newspaper, should be removed from this important post without delay.

The cost of government is expensive enough today without inflating it by excessive labor costs.

WHY NATIONAL HIGHWAY SAFETY?

When we study the drinking patterns of American society and contrast them with the attitudes and statements of our church groups comprising this society, we are face to face with the great American dilemma. The good that we would, we do not.

In the face of mounting evidence from research groups of the critical nature of the problems of drinking, drunkeness, and alcoholism in the United States, too many are still unconcerned and "pass by on the other side."

Sunday, February 25, 1968 has been designated "Safety Sunday" by the National Foundation for Highway Safety. On this day we are asked to challenge our members to drive courteously and at all times soberly.

Let us admit that simple knowledge of the facts of the problem is not enough. What is needed is a radical change in the behavior patterns of millions of Americans. This behavior pattern for many will affirm the principle of voluntary abstinence for the sake of love of God and concern for neighbor. For others, it will be a new degree of moderation and restraint and an awakened conscience regarding the dilemma. For those who travel on the "misty flats," or even on the "low road" of intoxication, let us designate Sunday, February 25, as the day when we pass from dilemma to decision.

We must recognize a new relatedness and interdependency of alcohol problems calling for massive cooperation and multidisciplinary approaches that involve the total community. Nothing less than ecumenical social action will be required to make the necessary behavioral pattern change in our living.

But government spending for the purpose of inhibiting the competitive system is destructive. American business should take heed of the dangers of this philosophy. A $300 billion budget in 1980 will provide a lot of government. Do you want that much?" We should all ponder Mr. Stans' admonition and remember that the answers is to start cutting federal spending now.

NEW CAMPUS RADIO SERIES BEGINS IN FALL

The first in a series of 15-minute programs for college campus radio stations had just been recorded by the National Assocation of Manufacturers for release this fall. "The programs are designed to help close the campus industry 'communications gap'," the NAM said.

Nine programs - one a month from September through May, 1968 - will be offered free to the 465 campus radio stations throughout the country.

The series is being programed and directed by NAM and produced and distributed by Radio-TV Features, Inc., a New York communications firm which specializes in campus radio programming.

"The programs will give students a chance to ask business leaders directly the 'no holds barred' questions young people have been posing about the role of business in our society, and about the opportunities in business for young people who are anxious to serve mankind idealistically," the NAM explained.

The association said that a wide range of topics will be covered in the series, each program featuring different participants. Only the program moderator, Sherman B. Chickering, youthful publisher of the campus magazine, Moderator, will be on all the programs.

The as yet unnamed radio series is the result of an NAM campus - industry relations program which began last year following opinion surveys which showed that an increasing number of top students felt "business is for the birds."

NAM's initial conference on the problem, held last year in New York, proved so popular that others were subsequently staged in San Francisco and Milwaukee, Wis. A fourth will be held Oct. 12 in Greensboro, N.C.

Businessmen and educators who participated in these conferences agreed that a "communications gap" exists between the younger generation and business.

SPACE FOR MIRACLES

In the United States we, more than most other peoples, have been blessed with vast and fertile lands. They have been bountiful in yielding food and fuels, clothing and shelter, minerals and mountainous harvests of all the things our people have required.

But, many Americans have accepted the bounty and beauty of the land without recognizing the burdens we impose upon it. We live in a time of mushrooming population; sprawling cities, superhighways, airports, parking lots, seashores and scenic monuments, wilderness areas and parks are encroaching upon the nation's productive land at a fantastic rate.

This year, again, there are quarrels between the productive users of our land, and those who prefer that more land be set aside for recreational, esthetic and cultural purposes. No one questions the conviction and dedication of those who wish to preserve wilderness areas, establish parks and protect the scenic grandeur of our country. But the stark reality is that the thousands of products which our forests yield for our people are of tremendous national significance, too. Growing trees and harvesting them in an endless cycle is an absolute essential if our country is to prosper and grow.

It is elemental that trees require land. It is equally obvious that this is one national resource which can be replenished, by forest regeneration. This is not true of petroleum or minerals, for example. When these resources are depleted they are gone forever. The replenishment cycle for our forests can be accomplished only if sufficient land is provided for the regrowth process.

Yet, if the Congress were to pass, in their present forms, just those bills which the Secretary of Interior has put forward this year to establish new Federal parks and trails, the impact upon our timberlands would be catastrophic, so seriously would they reduce the nation's opportunity to grown trees, harvest them, and replant.

It is the land itself which is the priceless natural resource of our nation. It can never be enlarged. Given access to the land we can grow trees forever. Denied th land, we cannot.

It has been said that "a tree is a miracle of God." But even a miracle requires growing space.

LET STORES HELP YOU WITH FIT OF CLOTHES

The men of this country are the best dressed you'll find anywhere, but there is one element that does not live up to the overall image. They select the proper clothes, but - when in a store's fitting room to decide on proper alterations for the new garment - they insist on making decisions as to how the suit should fit. Many of these men are assisted in the decision - making by their wives. This results in an imbalance of opinions, and the husband and wife usually get their way. (That, incidentally, must be the reason we see so many men wearing sleeves and trousers too long - which no professional fitter would countenance unless he was coerced!) So - to those of you who want to be really well dressed, and to you wives -- the American institute suggests you let the fitter decide on how the suit should fit. He knows!

An Editors Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

'HELPERS' AND DIGNITY

LAST month I spent an hour touring Brigham Young's "Beehive House" in Salt Lake City. It is a big house, as befitted a man who had 17 wives and 56 children. It is lavish by the standards of 100 years ago, for its owner was not only leader of the Mormon Church but governor of Utah Territory as well. It is the unapologetic mansion of a gifted and successful man.

But what intrigued me was the description by the intelligent woman guide of Brigham's relief system.

MANY of the faithful who struggled out to Salt Lake in the early days arrived with nothing. Literally nothing. So it was incumbent upon the community to keep them eating until they could carve out some acreage in the rich valley and dig an irrigation ditch.

Some of these people live in the Beehive House. They were not referred to as servants -- Brigham called them "helpers." But they did the work of servants and they got no pay. And for those who couldn't find room in the house there was the wall, which surrounded the house to overawe any marauding Indians. But, really, it was a make-work project: a day's labor on the wall got you two quarts of wheat.

MANY of the leading Utah families are descendants of helpers in the house and workers on the wall. These are prideful families. They glory in the humble beginnings of their Mormon ancestors. Indeed, no church is preoccupied with genealogy as the Latter-day Saints.

What Brigham Young discovered was a way of relief that didn't demean but even ennobled. It was not a way of life; it was a bridge to cross a chasm. You don't live on a bridge -- you use it to get somewhere.

THE New York Times of Nov. 23 reported that New York City's relief load has now climbed to 764,000. Even the most pessimistic forecasters didn't anticipate this figure until next June. In 20 months the New York City relief rolls have risen by 211,000.

Part of this rise is due to a new policy by the state of New York to the effect that adult children are no longer legally responsible for the support of their parents. If you dump the old folks on the taxpayers, you may be able to afford wall-to-wall carpeting or a better car.

Some of the increase is, of course, due to the fact that the job market for the utterly unskilled is shrinking. But it has not vanished. There are still plenty of busboy and dishwasher-wanted signs. And no one seems to want to be a helper in the house any more. These jobs are not considered dignified.

Most alarming is the beginning of the third generation of chronic reliefers. There are now babies whose parents and grandparents have no history of gainful employment. People born on the bridge are now dying on the bridge. They never get to the other side.

NOTHING has gone more haywire in America than the prevailing theories of public assistance and social uplift. A theorist is hard to separate from his theory, particularly if he has a graduate degree in sociology. The more the theories have failed, the more money he demands for their implementation.

We have been involved in all kinds of contradictions. In an effort to diminish aid-to-dependent children payments, we have driven the man-of-the-house out of the house during the day. But he returns at night to breed more "fatherless children."

When the city fathers of Newburgh, N.Y., alarmed at the influx of families from New York City slums, tried to set up a compulsory work program, the "liberal" press screamed at this attempt to rob the poor of dignity. Brigham Young's proud helpers would have been amazed.

WHAT we have is a "war on poverty" that has, in effect, written off millions of our fellow citizens. It preaches equality but perpetuates degradation. As our relief loads have grown, so have crime, family irresponsibility and social commotion. Clearly, it's time for a new look.

Maybe we ought to take a tour through old Brigham's Beehive House. A beehive is a busy, orderly place. It produces, not filth, but honey. There is no dignity without work, no uplift without struggle, no education without dedication.

Since recent theories are obviously bankrupt, we'd better look at a great national public works program in which no able-bodied and mentally normal relief recipient will be eligible for aid without making himself available for a public job or for training that will give him a marketable skill. Money tossed over the transom improves no one.

Brigham Young's people sang as they scoured the pots and built the wall. And the crowd moved across the bridge into the Land of Zion.

Inside Labor

LBJ WORRIED!

President Sets Up New Team to Head Off 'Crippling Work Stoppages' In '68

Washington, D. C.: -- One of the favorite stories of that urbane wit, Labor Secretary Willard Wirtz, (stolen from this columnist) is the tale of the egotistical lion who goes roaring through the underbrush, asking in a loud voice, "Who is the king of the jungle? The monkey says, "You are, sir." So does the impala. But the huge elephant, irritated, hurls the inquiring beast against a rock.

Unsteadily, the lion turns towards the mastodon and says plaintively, "Just because I ask a question, you don't have to get mad."

Well, Mr. Wirtz has not yet asked a single question and the leaders of labor are already ruffled. Wirtz and Secretary of Commerce Alexander Trowbridge, the Cabinet's two most suave figures, have been "instructed" by President Johnson to head off all those "crippling work stoppages" scheduled for 1968.

They can't fulfill the assignment. But they'll try. And they'll have to try alone. The President has virtually phased out the old Labor - Management Advisory Committee. He's using a stronger offense by throwing his Cabinet members into the game.

No one can head off the horrendously costly strikes this year without invoking court injunctions. Not only is the lineup of 1967's formidable labor leaders -- such as the Machinists' Roy Siemiller, the auto union's Walter Reuther and steel's I. W. Abel -- ready for a massive plunge, but the lesser knowns are also coming into the super bowl.

Of the four million workers whose contracts expire this year, there are some 500,000 communication employes led by a determined Joe Beirne, several hundred thousand rail workers and at least 185,000 coal miners who are headed by an angry Tony Boyle.

Add this to the fermenting aerospace, waterfront and steel industries, throw in the cooper strike now in its sixth month, and you have a pack of political and economic dynamite.

The President wants it defused. That's his word to Wirtz and Trowbridge.

What troubles the President is the awesome direct cost of labor-management jousting -- not just the deluge of imports when one of our industries is missing, but the actual direct cost.

Few realizes that Reuther's union spent $42 million on the Ford strike and a few smaller stoppages during September, October and November. And he still has some $43 million with which to back up "local" General Motors stoppages.

Not a minor matter is the loss of some $223.6 million in wages by Ford employes. The Ford company recons that the nation was hit for $2 billion as a result of that 60-day walkout.

The tax income on such amounts would have made the Treasury Dept.'s days much brighter.

And then there is the "smaller" copper (nonferrous) strike. It's already cost the 26-union combine some $25 million in strike relief and other expenses. Wage losses are close to $160 million, it is estimated.

Total loss to the struck states, industries and workers is well over $300 million. And it has hit communities ranging from Bisbee, Ariz., and Tacoma, Wash., to Perth Amboy, N. J. The wage loss in the latter city at two refineries alone is estimated at $2 million monthly.

And these are small stakes, costly as they are, compared to what will be on the table if the waterfront and the steel industry are shut down next September or October.

Just how the new team of Wirtz and Trowbridge will mastermind and quarterback the assignment and block those strikes is difficult to predict.

They are up against Siemiller who shut down the airlines and railroads in the past two years; Reuther who was all set to paralyze General Motors; the longshoremen's Teddy Gleason who, politely enough, rejected a flat request from the late Jack Kennedy to unfreeze the Atlantic and Gulf ports back in 1962; and the quiet man, "Ambassador" L. W. Abel, head of the steel union.

The latter, despite all the public talk of his inclination towards arbitration, has told his colleagues he's "sick of the White House's refusal to permit them to strike."

So Wirtz and Trowbridge will do their smoothest best. But they will fail unless the unions are granted record new wage and fringe packages running into many billions.

So sooner or later the President will have to be his own business agent.

It won't be easy, what with being a presidential candidate at the same time.

Money, the President will find, as Harry Truman once told this correspondent in the hours before he seized the steel mills, is the root of all upheaval on the industrial front.

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY: U.S. and Israeli intelligence disagree on Soviet menace; Israelis anticipate another war in six months; they assess current situation as Russian - American confrontation.

WASHINGTON -- American and Israeli intelligence reports sharply disagree on the extent of the Soviet threat in the Middle East. This has produced an "intelligence gap" which President Lyndon Johnson and Premier Levi Exhkol are attempting to bridge at their Texas conference.

The President brought to the LBJ ranch a secret report on the Middle East which takes a moderate view of the Soviet menance. Eshkol's intelligence presents a far more alarming picture of Russian penetration into the Arab world.

The official American assessment is that the Russians would like to keep the Middle East tense in order to exploit the situation, but do not intend to let events run out of control again. The disastrous Arab military defeat, in the American view, has had a restraining influence on the Kremlin.

The Israelis are convinced, however, that the Russians are moving into the Middle East to stay, and that only a blunt American ultimatum will prevent another Arab-Israeli war.

Here are the essential differences between American and Israeli intelligence:

1. The Israelis claim that Russia has already replaced the weapons the Arabs lost during the six-day war last June. U.S. intelligence estimates the replacement around 80 per cent. Both countries agree that the new Soviet weapons are more modern than Israeli equipment.

2. U.S. intelligence claims Egypt will be in no shape to menace Israel again for another two years at least. The Israeli assessment is that the Egyptians will be ready for another war in six months. The Russians also expect another Arab-Israeli war, according to U.S. intelligence from Moscow, but not for perhaps four or five years.

SOVIET SEAPOWER

3. The Israelis claim the Russians are using ports in Egypt and Algeria as naval bases. This means they intend to keep a fleet in the Mediterranean permanently, the Israelis warn. The Americans, however, believe Russia sent ships into the Mediterranean on a temporary basis as a gesture to impress the Arabs. Both American and Israeli estimates place the number of Soviet ships now in the Mediterranean around 45, though the Israelis claim the number fluctuates between 40 and 50 and the Americans show a fluctuation between 40 and 45. In contrast the U.S. Sixth Fleet has 50 ships in the Mediterranean; also, they pack greater fire power than the Soviet ships.

4. The Israelis say that 3,500 Russian technicians have arrived in Egypt and have already infiltrated the Egyptian army down to the battalion level. U.S. intelligence gives the figure as 2,500.

Israel is concerned over the number of late-model, supersonic Soviet planes which the Russians have introduced into Egypt, plus the construction of underground hangars to prevent Israel from catching the planes on the ground again as they did last June.

In short, the Israelis see the Middle East crisis no longer as an Arab-Israeli conflict but as a Soviet-American confrontation. They contend that the arms balance has been upset by Soviet shipments to the Arabs and that a military stalemate cannot be maintained without equal American shipments to Israel.

Finally, the Israelis believe it will take an American ultimatum, declaring the firm intention of the United States to intervene, to prevent an otherwise inevitable Arab attempt to crush Israel.

A pro-Israel policy is bitterly resisted, however, by the state department, which doesn't want to antagonize the Arabs. The State Department planners who prepared the secret Middle Eastern report for the President are distinctly pro-Arab.

PRO-ARAB DIPLOMATS

Almost all the foreign service officers who work on Middle Eastern affairs have served in Arab countries and are sympathetic to the Arab viewpoint. Even the Israeli desk officer, who handles the cables from the American embassy in Tel Aviv, has a pro-Arab background.

Until last year, the desk officer was Michael Sterner, who studied the Arabic language in Yemen, served in Cairo and manned the Egyptian desk at the state department before he was put in charge of Israeli affairs.

His successor is Alfred Atherton, Jr., who has served in Syria and as country director for Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Iraq before he was transferred to the Israeli desk.

The American ambassador in Israel, Wadsorth Barbour, is sympathetic toward Israel, but his diplomatic dispatches have always been processed by pro-Arab desk officers. At the White House, the President's foreign affairs specialist, Walt Rostow, though Jewish, has usually gone along with the state department's pro-Arab recommendations.

Almost without exception, the President has been obliged to overrule the state department every time he has made a decision favorable to Israel.

Note: At the LBJ ranch, Premier Eshkol has emphasized to the President Israel's urgent need for supersonic planes. The Israelis fear that Egypt's new Soviet planes, if flown by Soviet pilots, would control the skies. Russia has already set a precedent by sending Soviet pilots to fly some of the new planes which have just arrived in Yemen. The state department has verified that Soviet pilots are flying combat missions against royalist forces assaulting Yemen's capital.

LOUISVILLE'S HOUSING ORDINANCE

Twenty-one states and numerous cities have laid the basis for an attack on housing discrimination by enacting open housing legislation. A major effort was made in 1966 to put through federal legislation of this kind -- proscribing discrimination in the sale or rental of housing on the basis of race, color, creed, or national origin -- but it failed in the U. S. Senate. This year the emphasis has been at state and local levels.

The latest example is an open housing ordinance passed by the Louisville, Ky., Board of Aldermen which will become effective today. The ordinance makes it illegal to refuse to sell or rent on the above-named basis. The only exceptions are apartments of four units or less if the owner or a member of the family lives in the building, and rooming houses occupied by the owner or a member of his family. The measure also prohibits discrimination by financial institutions and realtors in housing transactions.

The ordinance provides fines of up to $100. Mayor Kenneth A. Schmied refused to sign the measure because, he said, it gave too much power to the Louisville and Jefferson County Human Relations Commission. The commission is empowered to investigate racial discrimination in housing, conduct hearings, and impose fines or seek court orders to enforce the law. Many an open housing law has failed to effectively increase residential integration because of lack of enforcement.

FIRE BUTLER

Missouri Industrial Commission Chairman James J. Butler should be dismissed.

He was the guiding force in an attempt to gouge Missouri taxpayers by setting St. Louis steamfitter pay scales as the wage rate for Jefferson City public construction work, even though local contractors had been paying a lower scale under a local agreement.

Butler, who has close ties with the St. Louis steamfitters, was a poor choice in the beginning. When appointed, he was a member of a Clayton law firm headed by the late John O'Connell Hough, a close associate and attorney for John L. Lawler, assistant business manager of St. Louis Steamfitters Local 562.

The controversy began last spring when The Globe-Democrat disclosed that the commission had set the St. Louis Local 562 pay rates in Jefferson City -- $2.12 an hour more than contractors on private projects were paying under their agreement with the Jefferson City local.

In ruling that the Missouri Industrial Commission's decision on the highway pay scale should be invalidated, Cole County Circuit Judge James T. Riley said the commission had based its wage determination solely on steamfitter pay at the construction site of the Chesebrough-Pond, Inc., manufacturing plant in Jefferson City involving mechanical work of $1.3 million.

It failed to consider that the Jefferson City pay scale had been paid on $3.9 million worth of public projects between May 1, 1966, and April 19, 1967.

The lower pay scale also was paid on private work totaling $856,984 during this same period.

By law, wage determinations by the commission should be made on all projects involving use of public funds.

It is obvious that the commission headed by Butler failed to observe the procedure spelled out by the law.

Butler, who tried to defend this gouge of Missouri taxpayers even after it was exposed by this newspaper, should be removed from this important post without delay.

The cost of government is expensive enough today without inflating it by excessive labor costs.

WHY NATIONAL HIGHWAY SAFETY?

When we study the drinking patterns of American society and contrast them with the attitudes and statements of our church groups comprising this society, we are face to face with the great American dilemma. The good that we would, we do not.

In the face of mounting evidence from research groups of the critical nature of the problems of drinking, drunkeness, and alcoholism in the United States, too many are still unconcerned and "pass by on the other side."

Sunday, February 25, 1968 has been designated "Safety Sunday" by the National Foundation for Highway Safety. On this day we are asked to challenge our members to drive courteously and at all times soberly.

Let us admit that simple knowledge of the facts of the problem is not enough. What is needed is a radical change in the behavior patterns of millions of Americans. This behavior pattern for many will affirm the principle of voluntary abstinence for the sake of love of God and concern for neighbor. For others, it will be a new degree of moderation and restraint and an awakened conscience regarding the dilemma. For those who travel on the "misty flats," or even on the "low road" of intoxication, let us designate Sunday, February 25, as the day when we pass from dilemma to decision.

We must recognize a new relatedness and interdependency of alcohol problems calling for massive cooperation and multidisciplinary approaches that involve the total community. Nothing less than ecumenical social action will be required to make the necessary behavioral pattern change in our living.

Mr. Maurice H. Stans, the former Director of the Budget, said in a recent Address: "The reasonable growth of government spending under orderly programs to meet real needs of the people cannot be questioned. But government spending for the purpose of inhibiting the competitive system is destructive. American business should take heed of the dangers of this philosophy. A $300 billion budget in 1980 will provide a lot of government. Do you want that much?" We should all ponder Mr. Stans' admonition and remember that the answers is to start cutting federal spending now.

But then she added:

"Mother, he smelled bad. I guess he must have been out cleaning his reindeers."

NEW CAMPUS RADIO SERIES BEGINS IN FALL

The first in a series of 15-minute programs for college campus radio stations had just been recorded by the National Assocation of Manufacturers for release this fall. "The programs are designed to help close the campus industry 'communications gap'," the NAM said. Nine programs - one a month from September through May, 1968 - will be offered free to the 465 campus radio stations throughout the country.

The series is being programed and directed by NAM and produced and distributed by Radio-TV Features, Inc., a New York communications firm which specializes in campus radio programming.

"The programs will give students a chance to ask business leaders directly the 'no holds barred' questions young people have been posing about the role of business in our society, and about the opportunities in business for young people who are anxious to serve mankind idealistically," the NAM explained.

The association said that a wide range of topics will be covered in the series, each program featuring different participants. Only the program moderator, Sherman B. Chickering, youthful publisher of the campus magazine, Moderator, will be on all the programs.

The as yet unnamed radio series is the result of an NAM campus - industry relations program which began last year following opinion surveys which showed that an increasing number of top students felt "business is for the birds."

NAM's initial conference on the problem, held last year in New York, proved so popular that others were subsequently staged in San Francisco and Milwaukee, Wis. A fourth will be held Oct. 12 in Greensboro, N.C.

Businessmen and educators who participated in these conferences agreed that a "communications gap" exists between the younger generation and business.

SPACE FOR MIRACLES

In the United States we, more than most other peoples, have been blessed with vast and fertile lands. They have been bountiful in yielding food and fuels, clothing and shelter, minerals and mountainous harvests of all the things our people have required.

But, many Americans have accepted the bounty and beauty of the land without recognizing the burdens we impose upon it. We live in a time of mushrooming population; sprawling cities, superhighways, airports, parking lots, seashores and scenic monuments, wilderness areas and parks are encroaching upon the nation's productive land at a fantastic rate.

This year, again, there are quarrels between the productive users of our land, and those who prefer that more land be set aside for recreational, esthetic and cultural purposes. No one questions the conviction and dedication of those who wish to preserve wilderness areas, establish parks and protect the scenic grandeur of our country. But the stark reality is that the thousands of products which our forests yield for our people are of tremendous national significance, too. Growing trees and harvesting them in an endless cycle is an absolute essential if our country is to prosper and grow.

It is elemental that trees require land. It is equally obvious that this is one national resource which can be replenished, by forest regeneration. This is not true of petroleum or minerals, for example. When these resources are depleted they are gone forever. The replenishment cycle for our forests can be accomplished only if sufficient land is provided for the regrowth process.

Yet, if the Congress were to pass, in their present forms, just those bills which the Secretary of Interior has put forward this year to establish new Federal parks and trails, the impact upon our timberlands would be catastrophic, so seriously would they reduce the nation's opportunity to grown trees, harvest them, and replant.

It is the land itself which is the priceless natural resource of our nation. It can never be enlarged. Given access to the land we can grow trees forever. Denied th land, we cannot.

It has been said that "a tree is a miracle of God." But even a miracle requires growing space.

LET STORES HELP YOU WITH FIT OF CLOTHES

The men of this country are the best dressed you'll find anywhere, but there is one element that does not live up to the overall image. They select the proper clothes, but - when in a store's fitting room to decide on proper alterations for the new garment - they insist on making decisions as to how the suit should fit. Many of these men are assisted in the decision - making by their wives. This results in an imbalance of opinions, and the husband and wife usually get their way. (That, incidentally, must be the reason we see so many men wearing sleeves and trousers too long - which no professional fitter would countenance unless he was coerced!) So - to those of you who want to be really well dressed, and to you wives -- the American institute suggests you let the fitter decide on how the suit should fit. He knows!

Washington Merry - Go - Round

By Drew Pearson

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY: U.S. and Israeli intelligence disagree on Soviet menace; Israelis anticipate another war in six months; they assess current situation as Russian - American confrontation.

WASHINGTON -- American and Israeli intelligence reports sharply disagree on the extent of the Soviet threat in the Middle East. This has produced an "intelligence gap" which President Lyndon Johnson and Premier Levi Exhkol are attempting to bridge at their Texas conference.

The President brought to the LBJ ranch a secret report on the Middle East which takes a moderate view of the Soviet menance. Eshkol's intelligence presents a far more alarming picture of Russian penetration into the Arab world.

The official American assessment is that the Russians would like to keep the Middle East tense in order to exploit the situation, but do not intend to let events run out of control again. The disastrous Arab military defeat, in the American view, has had a restraining influence on the Kremlin.

The Israelis are convinced, however, that the Russians are moving into the Middle East to stay, and that only a blunt American ultimatum will prevent another Arab-Israeli war.

Here are the essential differences between American and Israeli intelligence:

1. The Israelis claim that Russia has already replaced the weapons the Arabs lost during the six-day war last June. U.S. intelligence estimates the replacement around 80 per cent. Both countries agree that the new Soviet weapons are more modern than Israeli equipment.

2. U.S. intelligence claims Egypt will be in no shape to menace Israel again for another two years at least. The Israeli assessment is that the Egyptians will be ready for another war in six months. The Russians also expect another Arab-Israeli war, according to U.S. intelligence from Moscow, but not for perhaps four or five years.

SOVIET SEAPOWER

3. The Israelis claim the Russians are using ports in Egypt and Algeria as naval bases. This means they intend to keep a fleet in the Mediterranean permanently, the Israelis warn. The Americans, however, believe Russia sent ships into the Mediterranean on a temporary basis as a gesture to impress the Arabs. Both American and Israeli estimates place the number of Soviet ships now in the Mediterranean around 45, though the Israelis claim the number fluctuates between 40 and 50 and the Americans show a fluctuation between 40 and 45. In contrast the U.S. Sixth Fleet has 50 ships in the Mediterranean; also, they pack greater fire power than the Soviet ships.

4. The Israelis say that 3,500 Russian technicians have arrived in Egypt and have already infiltrated the Egyptian army down to the battalion level. U.S. intelligence gives the figure as 2,500.

Israel is concerned over the number of late-model, supersonic Soviet planes which the Russians have introduced into Egypt, plus the construction of underground hangars to prevent Israel from catching the planes on the ground again as they did last June.

In short, the Israelis see the Middle East crisis no longer as an Arab-Israeli conflict but as a Soviet-American confrontation. They contend that the arms balance has been upset by Soviet shipments to the Arabs and that a military stalemate cannot be maintained without equal American shipments to Israel.

Finally, the Israelis believe it will take an American ultimatum, declaring the firm intention of the United States to intervene, to prevent an otherwise inevitable Arab attempt to crush Israel.

A pro-Israel policy is bitterly resisted, however, by the state department, which doesn't want to antagonize the Arabs. The State Department planners who prepared the secret Middle Eastern report for the President are distinctly pro-Arab.

PRO-ARAB DIPLOMATS

Almost all the foreign service officers who work on Middle Eastern affairs have served in Arab countries and are sympathetic to the Arab viewpoint. Even the Israeli desk officer, who handles the cables from the American embassy in Tel Aviv, has a pro-Arab background.

Until last year, the desk officer was Michael Sterner, who studied the Arabic language in Yemen, served in Cairo and manned the Egyptian desk at the state department before he was put in charge of Israeli affairs.

His successor is Alfred Atherton, Jr., who has served in Syria and as country director for Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Iraq before he was transferred to the Israeli desk.

The American ambassador in Israel, Wadsorth Barbour, is sympathetic toward Israel, but his diplomatic dispatches have always been processed by pro-Arab desk officers. At the White House, the President's foreign affairs specialist, Walt Rostow, though Jewish, has usually gone along with the state department's pro-Arab recommendations.

Almost without exception, the President has been obliged to overrule the state department every time he has made a decision favorable to Israel.

Note: At the LBJ ranch, Premier Eshkol has emphasized to the President Israel's urgent need for supersonic planes. The Israelis fear that Egypt's new Soviet planes, if flown by Soviet pilots, would control the skies. Russia has already set a precedent by sending Soviet pilots to fly some of the new planes which have just arrived in Yemen. The state department has verified that Soviet pilots are flying combat missions against royalist forces assaulting Yemen's capital.

An Editors Outlook

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones

'HELPERS' AND DIGNITY

LAST month I spent an hour touring Brigham Young's "Beehive House" in Salt Lake City. It is a big house, as befitted a man who had 17 wives and 56 children. It is lavish by the standards of 100 years ago, for its owner was not only leader of the Mormon Church but governor of Utah Territory as well. It is the unapologetic mansion of a gifted and successful man.

But what intrigued me was the description by the intelligent woman guide of Brigham's relief system.

MANY of the faithful who struggled out to Salt Lake in the early days arrived with nothing. Literally nothing. So it was incumbent upon the community to keep them eating until they could carve out some acreage in the rich valley and dig an irrigation ditch.

Some of these people live in the Beehive House. They were not referred to as servants -- Brigham called them "helpers." But they did the work of servants and they got no pay. And for those who couldn't find room in the house there was the wall, which surrounded the house to overawe any marauding Indians. But, really, it was a make-work project: a day's labor on the wall got you two quarts of wheat.

MANY of the leading Utah families are descendants of helpers in the house and workers on the wall. These are prideful families. They glory in the humble beginnings of their Mormon ancestors. Indeed, no church is preoccupied with genealogy as the Latter-day Saints.

What Brigham Young discovered was a way of relief that didn't demean but even ennobled. It was not a way of life; it was a bridge to cross a chasm. You don't live on a bridge -- you use it to get somewhere.

THE New York Times of Nov. 23 reported that New York City's relief load has now climbed to 764,000. Even the most pessimistic forecasters didn't anticipate this figure until next June. In 20 months the New York City relief rolls have risen by 211,000.

Part of this rise is due to a new policy by the state of New York to the effect that adult children are no longer legally responsible for the support of their parents. If you dump the old folks on the taxpayers, you may be able to afford wall-to-wall carpeting or a better car.

Some of the increase is, of course, due to the fact that the job market for the utterly unskilled is shrinking. But it has not vanished. There are still plenty of busboy and dishwasher-wanted signs. And no one seems to want to be a helper in the house any more. These jobs are not considered dignified.

Most alarming is the beginning of the third generation of chronic reliefers. There are now babies whose parents and grandparents have no history of gainful employment. People born on the bridge are now dying on the bridge. They never get to the other side.

NOTHING has gone more haywire in America than the prevailing theories of public assistance and social uplift. A theorist is hard to separate from his theory, particularly if he has a graduate degree in sociology. The more the theories have failed, the more money he demands for their implementation.

We have been involved in all kinds of contradictions. In an effort to diminish aid-to-dependent children payments, we have driven the man-of-the-house out of the house during the day. But he returns at night to breed more "fatherless children."

When the city fathers of Newburgh, N.Y., alarmed at the influx of families from New York City slums, tried to set up a compulsory work program, the "liberal" press screamed at this attempt to rob the poor of dignity. Brigham Young's proud helpers would have been amazed.

WHAT we have is a "war on poverty" that has, in effect, written off millions of our fellow citizens. It preaches equality but perpetuates degradation. As our relief loads have grown, so have crime, family irresponsibility and social commotion. Clearly, it's time for a new look.

Maybe we ought to take a tour through old Brigham's Beehive House. A beehive is a busy, orderly place. It produces, not filth, but honey. There is no dignity without work, no uplift without struggle, no education without dedication.

Since recent theories are obviously bankrupt, we'd better look at a great national public works program in which no able-bodied and mentally normal relief recipient will be eligible for aid without making himself available for a public job or for training that will give him a marketable skill. Money tossed over the transom improves no one.

Brigham Young's people sang as they scoured the pots and built the wall. And the crowd moved across the bridge into the Land of Zion.

LBJ WORRIED!

President Sets Up New Team to Head Off 'Crippling Work Stoppages' In '68

Washington, D. C.: -- One of the favorite stories of that urbane wit, Labor Secretary Willard Wirtz, (stolen from this columnist) is the tale of the egotistical lion who goes roaring through the underbrush, asking in a loud voice, "Who is the king of the jungle? The monkey says, "You are, sir." So does the impala. But the huge elephant, irritated, hurls the inquiring beast against a rock.

Unsteadily, the lion turns towards the mastodon and says plaintively, "Just because I ask a question, you don't have to get mad."

Well, Mr. Wirtz has not yet asked a single question and the leaders of labor are already ruffled. Wirtz and Secretary of Commerce Alexander Trowbridge, the Cabinet's two most suave figures, have been "instructed" by President Johnson to head off all those "crippling work stoppages" scheduled for 1968.

They can't fulfill the assignment. But they'll try. And they'll have to try alone. The President has virtually phased out the old Labor - Management Advisory Committee. He's using a stronger offense by throwing his Cabinet members into the game.

No one can head off the horrendously costly strikes this year without invoking court injunctions. Not only is the lineup of 1967's formidable labor leaders -- such as the Machinists' Roy Siemiller, the auto union's Walter Reuther and steel's I. W. Abel -- ready for a massive plunge, but the lesser knowns are also coming into the super bowl.

Of the four million workers whose contracts expire this year, there are some 500,000 communication employes led by a determined Joe Beirne, several hundred thousand rail workers and at least 185,000 coal miners who are headed by an angry Tony Boyle.

Add this to the fermenting aerospace, waterfront and steel industries, throw in the cooper strike now in its sixth month, and you have a pack of political and economic dynamite.

The President wants it defused. That's his word to Wirtz and Trowbridge.

What troubles the President is the awesome direct cost of labor-management jousting -- not just the deluge of imports when one of our industries is missing, but the actual direct cost.

Few realizes that Reuther's union spent $42 million on the Ford strike and a few smaller stoppages during September, October and November. And he still has some $43 million with which to back up "local" General Motors stoppages.

Not a minor matter is the loss of some $223.6 million in wages by Ford employes. The Ford company recons that the nation was hit for $2 billion as a result of that 60-day walkout.

The tax income on such amounts would have made the Treasury Dept.'s days much brighter.

And then there is the "smaller" copper (nonferrous) strike. It's already cost the 26-union combine some $25 million in strike relief and other expenses. Wage losses are close to $160 million, it is estimated.

Total loss to the struck states, industries and workers is well over $300 million. And it has hit communities ranging from Bisbee, Ariz., and Tacoma, Wash., to Perth Amboy, N. J. The wage loss in the latter city at two refineries alone is estimated at $2 million monthly.

And these are small stakes, costly as they are, compared to what will be on the table if the waterfront and the steel industry are shut down next September or October.

Just how the new team of Wirtz and Trowbridge will mastermind and quarterback the assignment and block those strikes is difficult to predict.

They are up against Siemiller who shut down the airlines and railroads in the past two years; Reuther who was all set to paralyze General Motors; the longshoremen's Teddy Gleason who, politely enough, rejected a flat request from the late Jack Kennedy to unfreeze the Atlantic and Gulf ports back in 1962; and the quiet man, "Ambassador" I. W. Abel, head of the steel union.

The latter, despite all the public talk of his inclination towards arbitration, has told his colleagues he's "sick of the White House's refusal to permit them to strike."

So Wirtz and Trowbridge will do their smoothest best. But they will fail unless the unions are granted record new wage and fringe packages running into many billions.

So sooner or later the President will have to be his own business agent.

It won't be easy, what with being a presidential candidate at the same time.

Money, the President will find, as Harry Truman once told this correspondent in the hours before he seized the steel mills, is the root of all upheaval on the industrial front.

John Moroni's 15 points topped an eight-man scoring barrage of the Hornets, who got two others in twin figures. Ford Morgan and Tony Jenkins dropped in 11 markers apiece.

The win moved the Hornets closer to a .500 season at 6-8. The loss was the fifth for the Wildcats, third in a row since losing in the consolation bracket of its invitational tournament last weekend. Puxico upended the Cats earlier this week.

EDITOR'S NOTE -- This is the first of a series on what high school athletics are all about.

By Clifford B. Fogan
Executive Secretary, National Federation of High School Athletic Associations

The title of this presentation is "What Is It All About?" This certainly is not an original title. Neither is it new. The question has been asked before, originally, perhaps, by L. W. Smith, the National Federation's first secretary. Since then, it has been posed from time to time. It continues to be a good question for those responsible for the determination of policies and procedures for interscholastic athletics. Obviously, it is not sophisticated but it requires thought to answer. We trust that each and every person attending this session today has asked it.

School athletics are about education. The only reason we have the athletics in the school curriculum is that they can and do contribute to the education of participants and spectators. The person who strives for sophistication may attempt to classify this reply as trite. For such people we have sympathy. They are cynics or incapable of giving direction to a program with great and unique potential.

It is not at all academic that athletics are included in the school curriculum today because they can and do contribute to education. Not only can they make this contribution, but they must do it. When we avoid facing up to this question, when we fail to acknowledge the purpose of athletics, and when we fail to keep them on a direct course to the stated objective, we have problems.

Many of our problems result from a misunderstanding of the purposes of interscholastic athletics. The principal source of confusion is the comparison of professional athletics with school athletics. Suffice it to say that the professionals are in the entertainment business. They are in show business and their purposes are to entertain and to earn a financial return for the producer. In a sense, the players are performers. They are actors.

The acknowledgment that professional athletics is a form of show business does not in any way indict them. Not at all. They are wonderful entertainment. There are those among us who believe that there are few forms of entertainment which are better. However, we most certainly must not labor under the misconception that the Bart Starrs, the Johnny Unitas, the Carl Yastremskis, the Bill Russells, and the other participants in professional athletics are being educated in a way you and I would have school athletics educate high school boys and girls. We point out that there is a vital difference between the professional and interscholastic levels, a difference which must be understood by educators, and a different the public all too often fails to understand. The professionals are interested in the income which accrues from their competition. We will agree, I'm sure, that their efforts have been well rewarded in this respect. When there is a failure to understand this difference, there is a possibility of trouble for the school.

To point out that there is a fundamental difference in the purpose of the program does not carry with it any implication whatever that interscholastic athletics should not entertain, nor that income should not be derived from them. The contrary is true. One of the benefits derived from a good, sound interscholastic athletic program, is that it does provide wholesome entertainment. It provides an activity around which the student body can center its attention and which involves the community. This can be wholesome if the leadership is strong and proper.

A fair and reasonable income inuring from admissions to interscholastic athletic events is desirable. There is nothing whatever wrong with requiring an admission fee to interscholastic athletic contests, particularly from non-students. In addition to providing some means of defraying the cost of the program, admissions charges provide a means of control.

For the professionals, the income determines the policy. For interscholastics, the income or potential income must never determine the policy. The matter of income from secondary school athletic programs must be a secondary consideration and, in fact, be incidental.

Neither the participant, the program, nor the school must be exploited for any reason whatever. Exploitation most frequently results when income determines a policy, but there are other reasons which may cause participants, programs, or the institutions, to be exploited. Among these are the desire for publicity, and the determination to win at whatever the cost.

Today, state associations throughout the United States protect participants, programs, and schools from exploitation. One of the principal purposes for which state associations were formed was to protect the participant and school program. As all of us know, interscholastic athletics were a natural outgrowth of student interest. School administrators, about the turn of the century, had their schools join together in associations for the specific purpose of subjugating athletics. Many of the leaders did not realize the educational potential of interscholastics. They did not have an understanding of what athletics could do for a student or a school. They considered them vulgar, a waste of time, and actually indicted those who participated in them. However, by the second decade of the 1900's knowledgeable administrators realized there was going to be an interscholastic program and that it was possible to channel it into individual and institutional good. As a result, state associations established a board to carry out the policies which the schools as a group, adopted. This board was called the Board of Control. The name, Board of Control, was not just a chance designation arrived at by chance. It meant exactly what it said. It was for the control of interscholastics.

From 1920 to 1940, the state association programs were developed and refined. In general, they expanded. It was during this period that the opportunities and possibilities of educating through athletics were first realized. Then in the period from 1940 to the present, the program continued to expand. Naturally there is less pioneering now. In fact, there is some promoting of the sports program.

In 1964 when the Cardinals won the pennant and World Series, they had 3 players who hit over .300 - they were: Lou Brock with .315, Curt Flood with .311 and Bill White with .303. Next in line were Ken Boyer, .295 - Dick Groat, .292 and Tim McCarver .288.

In 1947, Jerome "Whitey" Harris won the Vermont singles classic at Los Angeles with a 4-game total of 896 and received $500.

In the 1920-21 season a Gary, Indiana, bowler named A. M. Hazelgreen finished the season with a 186 average to lead his league and he did not have a 600 series in the entire 33-week season. Pretty consistent I'd say.

Joseph Paul (Joe) DiMaggio had a lifetime batting average of .325 and twice led the league with .381 in 1939 and .352 in 1940. He also hit safely in 56 consecutive games in 1941. Bowling Magazine published by the American Congress was started in 1934. It is sent free to all sanctioned league secretaries.

Scott Central Narrowly Escapes Delta Bobcats

DELTA -- Scott County Central rolled to its 13th basketball win of the season last night on the shoulders of Paul Hale's 20 points and key late game buckets, edging Delta 53-52 in the varsity.

The junior varsity unit rolled up a 54-34 win over Doyle Denbow's crew. Both games were in Scott - Mississippi conference play.

Hale dropped in a free throw with four seconds to go to push the Braves into the winners circle after they trailed by 10 points throughout most of the first three periods.

Delta's Ronnie Cook's 25-point production kept the Bobcats in the lead throughout the encounter. Scott County had trouble corralling the accurate field shooting of the right hander.

Delta rolled up a 10-7 first period lead and out-scored the Braves in each of the next two periods before running into a drought in the final stanza, failing to the red-hot fourth period shooting of the Braves, who took a 19-11 final period advantage and the game.

Scott County's attack was hampered by the loss of one of its ace shooters and rebounders, Lee Stevens, who has been ill with the flu since it's Cape Girardeau Christmas tournament championship win. He had been averaging around 15 points for the Braves.

Coach Kenneth Wages unit took its win at the charity line. It hit on 19 attempts as it suffered a 20-17 defeat from the field by the hot shooting Delta Bobcats.

Scott Central meets the Sikeston Bulldogs Tuesday in a key rivalry battle.

HOLES IN THE CHURCH FENCE

I noticed a fence the other day. There were many strands of wire. And yet there were many holes between the strands. Nonetheless each piece of wire held tightly to each other piece and in spite of the holes it was a good fence. The church is this way. The lives of those of us who compose the church have their holes, their imperfections. But as we learn to hold to one another in the fellowship Christ makes possible our lives begin to become something more than they could be alone. The church has something to contribute to your life. I hope your are finding it.

Sincerely,
Robert E. Lively, Jr.

Advance Rolls Past Bloomfield

ADVANCE -- Using the run and shoot ball tactics of the old Puxico Indian and More Tiger teams of the late 1950s the Advance Hornets handed Bloomfield its third straight basketball defeat last night.

Advance broke into a 12-7 first period lead and never trailed. The Hornets broke down floor for fast break baskets time and again.

But the big story of the night was the Hornets' defensive work. They held all but one Wildcat player to under eight points, including the Cats' big 6-6 center Glenn "Rawhide" Williamson, who got only eight points.

Both teams drew numerous fouls. They used pressing defenses with Advance taking 25 personals to Bloomfield's 24.

John Moroni's 15 points topped an eight-man scoring barrage of the Hornets, who got two others in twin figures. Ford Morgan and Tony Jenkins dropped in 11 markers apiece.

The win moved the Hornets closer to a .500 season at 6-8. The loss was the fifth for the Wildcats, third in a row since losing in the consolation bracket of its invitational tournament last weekend. Puxico upended the Cats earlier this week.

EDITOR'S NOTE -- This is the first of a series on what high school athletics are all about.

By Clifford B. Fogan
Executive Secretary, National Federation of High School Athletic Associations

The title of this presentation is "What Is It All About?" This certainly is not an original title. Neither is it new. The question has been asked before, originally, perhaps, by L. W. Smith, the National Federation's first secretary. Since then, it has been posed from time to time. It continues to be a good question for those responsible for the determination of policies and procedures for interscholastic athletics. Obviously, it is not sophisticated but it requires thought to answer. We trust that each and every person attending this session today has asked it.

School athletics are about education. The only reason we have the athletics in the school curriculum is that they can and do contribute to the education of participants and spectators. The person who strives for sophistication may attempt to classify this reply as trite. For such people we have sympathy. They are cynics or incapable of giving direction to a program with great and unique potential.

It is not at all academic that athletics are included in the school curriculum today because they can and do contribute to education. Not only can they make this contribution, but they must do it. When we avoid facing up to this question, when we fail to acknowledge the purpose of athletics, and when we fail to keep them on a direct course to the stated objective, we have problems.

Many of our problems result from a misunderstanding of the purposes of interscholastic athletics. The principal source of confusion is the comparison of professional athletics with school athletics. Suffice it to say that the professionals are in the entertainment business. They are in show business and their purposes are to entertain and to earn a financial return for the producer. In a sense, the players are performers. They are actors.

The acknowledgment that professional athletics is a form of show business does not in any way indict them. Not at all. They are wonderful entertainment. There are those among us who believe that there are few forms of entertainment which are better. However, we most certainly must not labor under the misconception that the Bart Starrs, the Johnny Unitas, the Carl Yastremskis, the Bill Russells, and the other participants in professional athletics are being educated in a way you and I would have school athletics educate high school boys and girls. We point out that there is a vital difference between the professional and interscholastic levels, a difference which must be understood by educators, and a different the public all too often fails to understand. The professionals are interested in the income which accrues from their competition. We will agree, I'm sure, that their efforts have been well rewarded in this respect. When there is a failure to understand this difference, there is a possibility of trouble for the school.

To point out that there is a fundamental difference in the purpose of the program does not carry with it any implication whatever that interscholastic athletics should not entertain, nor that income should not be derived from them. The contrary is true. One of the benefits derived from a good, sound interscholastic athletic program, is that it does provide wholesome entertainment. It provides an activity around which the student body can center its attention and which involves the community. This can be wholesome if the leadership is strong and proper.

A fair and reasonable income inuring from admissions to interscholastic athletic events is desirable. There is nothing whatever wrong with requiring an admission fee to interscholastic athletic contests, particularly from non-students. In addition to providing some means of defraying the cost of the program, admissions charges provide a means of control.

For the professionals, the income determines the policy. For interscholastics, the income or potential income must never determine the policy. The matter of income from secondary school athletic programs must be a secondary consideration and, in fact, be incidental.

Neither the participant, the program, nor the school must be exploited for any reason whatever. Exploitation most frequently results when income determines a policy, but there are other reasons which may cause participants, programs, or the institutions, to be exploited. Among these are the desire for publicity, and the determination to win at whatever the cost.

Today, state associations throughout the United States protect participants, programs, and schools from exploitation. One of the principal purposes for which state associations were formed was to protect the participant and school program. As all of us know, interscholastic athletics were a natural outgrowth of student interest. School administrators, about the turn of the century, had their schools join together in associations for the specific purpose of subjugating athletics. Many of the leaders did not realize the educational potential of interscholastics. They did not have an understanding of what athletics could do for a student or a school. They considered them vulgar, a waste of time, and actually indicted those who participated in them. However, by the second decade of the 1900's knowledgeable administrators realized there was going to be an interscholastic program and that it was possible to channel it into individual and institutional good. As a result, state associations established a board to carry out the policies which the schools as a group, adopted. This board was called the Board of Control. The name, Board of Control, was not just a chance designation arrived at by chance. It meant exactly what it said. It was for the control of interscholastics.

From 1920 to 1940, the state association programs were developed and refined. In general, they expanded. It was during this period that the opportunities and possibilities of educating through athletics were first realized. Then in the period from 1940 to the present, the program continued to expand. Naturally there is less pioneering now. In fact, there is some promoting of the sports program.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)— Art Hernandez said Friday he has signed for a match with middleweight champion Emile Griffith in Rome on Jan. 9. The bout will be a nontitle go. Hernandez said he will fly to Italy on Monday and train with former champion Nino Benvenuti at Trieste.

In 1964 when the Cardinals won the pennant and World Series, they had 3 players who hit over .300 - they were: Lou Brock with .315, Curt Flood with .311 and Bill White with .303. Next in line were Ken Boyer, .295 - Dick Groat, .292 and Tim McCarver .288.

In 1947, Jerome "Whitey" Harris won the Vermont singles classic at Los Angeles with a 4-game total of 896 and received $500.

In the 1920-21 season a Gary, Indiana, bowler named A. M. Hazelgreen finished the season with a 186 average to lead his league and he did not have a 600 series in the entire 33-week season. Pretty consistent I'd say.

Scott Central Narrowly Escapes Delta Bobcats

DELTA -- Scott County Central rolled to its 13th basketball win of the season last night on the shoulders of Paul Hale's 20 points and key late game buckets, edging Delta 53-52 in the varsity.

The junior varsity unit rolled up a 54-34 win over Doyle Denbow's crew. Both games were in Scott - Mississippi conference play.

Hale dropped in a free throw with four seconds to go to push the Braves into the winners circle after they trailed by 10 points throughout most of the first three periods.

Delta's Ronnie Cook's 25-point production kept the Bobcats in the lead throughout the encounter. Scott County had trouble corralling the accurate field shooting of the right hander.

Delta rolled up a 10-7 first period lead and out-scored the Braves in each of the next two periods before running into a drought in the final stanza, falling to the red-hot fourth period shooting of the Braves, who took a 19-11 final period advantage and the game.

Scott County's attack was hampered by the loss of one of its ace shooters and rebounders, Lee Stevens, who has been ill with the flu since it's Cape Girardeau Christmas tournament championship win. He had been averaging around 15 points for the Braves.

Coach Kenneth Wages unit took its win at the charity line. It hit on 19 attempts as it suffered a 20-17 defeat from the field by the hot shooting Delta Bobcats.

Scott Central meets the Sikeston Bulldogs Tuesday in a key rivalry battle.

Lilbourn Turns Back Gideon In Loop Play

LILBOURN -- The Lilbourn Panthers stumped Gideon in a pair of New Madrid County conference basketball games last last night, taking a 51-43 varsity win after the junior varsity edged out a 33-30 victory.

Lilbourn used its pressing man to man defense, grabbing the ball on numerous mistakes. It trailed 11-7 in the first quarter, but exploded for 21 points in the third period to move ahead after a 22-22 tie.

Gideon did a little defense work of its own. It held the Panthers usually high scoring Larry Wolfe to five points, 13 below his season average. Joe Baldwin, Harold Allred and Mike Bowen took up the slack by pouring in 15, 15 and 11 points.

Jerry Coleman, Gideon's ace junior center, rolled up 20 points, two below his season average to lead the Bulldogs' attack.

HOLES IN THE CHURCH FENCE

I noticed a fence the other day. There were many strands of wire. And yet there were many holes between the strands. Nonetheless each piece of wire held tightly to each other piece and in spite of the holes it was a good fence. The church is this way. The lives of those of us who compose the church have their holes, their imperfections. But as we learn to hold to one another in the fellowship Christ makes possible our lives begin to become something more than they could be alone. The church has something to contribute to your life. I hope your are finding it.

Sincerely,
Robert E. Lively, Jr.

PEACE CANDIDATE challenger to President Johnson may be entered in next year's Democratic primaries in the person of Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota. McCarthy, who was under consideration as the President's vice-presidential running mate in 1964, says he is prepared to challenge Johnson in the primaries with the sole objective of inducing a change in administration policy on Vietnam.

In the late 1940s, fire losses (exclusive of forest fires) came to more than 3 per cent of the U.S. gross national product, according to National Fire Protection Association statistics. The rate has declined to little more than 2 per cent currently, although the total dollar loss is much higher because of the rapid growth of the GNP during the past two decades.

Missouri—America's Exciting Land of Western Lore

Jesse James . . . Joseph Smith . . . Mark Twain—these are just a few of the famous names in American history that are associated with Missouri.

A combination of famous historic landmarks and scenic beauty make Missouri a photographer's paradise, where there's something to snap wherever you turn.

In Liberty, Missouri, the Liberty jail—where the "Mormon Prophet", Joseph Smith was imprisoned during the bitter winter of 1838-39—has been restored by members of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Today it's a hallowed and sacred place to members of the religious order. The cutaway restoration of the jail, including the dungeon, is housed in one of the most beautiful buildings to be found in the state. Untold thousands visit the shrine each year. They come from every state in the Union and many foreign countries.

It was in Liberty, too, that Jesse James and his gang staged history's first daylight bank robbery on February 13, 1866. On a corner of the square is the oldest landmark — the building that housed the bank reputedly robbed on that day.

This statue in St. Joseph, Missouri, commemorates the days of the famous Pony Express, which carried the mails between April 3, 1860 and October 24, 1861.

In "Mark Twain's" home town of Hannibal, Missouri, on the banks of the Mississippi River, a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer stands in tribute to one of the state's most famous citizens.

Recently, a distant cousin of a man killed during the holdup acquired the building and rebuilt it exactly as it was at the time.

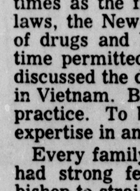

North of Liberty, outside the town of Kearny, stands the home of Jesse and Frank James. It still contains much of the original furniture and can be toured for a small fee. On the edge of Kearny, you can see James' grave, where it lies near two giant cedar trees.

The house where the outlaw was killed—on April 5, 1882, by two of his cronies, Bob and Charles Ford—may be visited in St. Joseph, Missouri, and is still furnished as it was on the day of the murder, including the plaque "Home Sweet Home" that James was allegedly in process of hanging on the wall when he was shot.

In St. Joseph, another must-see is The Pony Express Museum, which tells the story of St. Joseph graphically, along with the history of the Pony Express from April 3, 1860 to October 24, 1861.

Samuel Clemens, better known as "Mark Twain," grew up in the Mississippi River town, which has a population of 21,000, has a lighthouse and bridge named for Mark Twain, and a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer that was erected in tribute to one of America's most famous authors.

Other notable Missourians have included Daniel Boone and General Grant — both owned farms there—and former President Harry S. Truman.

Man's All-Wise Pose Casts Doubts on His Credibility

By DAVID POLING

One of my theories is that leaders in national life are allowed only one or two areas of authority and respect. They might extend their interest to other fields, in rare exceptions be a "renaissance man" and capture several more. But usually you are allowed one or two major lines and that's it.

When Wilt Chamberlain admitted that he was considering the world of professional boxing nobody wrote for tickets. Why? He is Mr. Basketball. His court play, team effort and personal excellence are unsurpassed. Honor and fame and cash have flooded in. But boxing? He was about as welcome as a giraffe at a dog show. He had found and claimed his place in the sports world and in the heart of the fans on the basketball court. He got the message.

Do you recall the news item that appeared before the national political conventions of 1964 stating that, in spite of the rumors, Billy Graham would not consider an invitation to be on a party ticket? It was almost funny. The public has long shown its interest and support of Graham as evangelist and preacher in countless religious meetings and services. But no one beyond Graham's staff had ever allowed that he might run for political office.

The result would be embarrassing to the public and disastrous to the evangelist. One field yes—two, no.

This is true on delicate social issues and the role of a local minister. A congregation or community will respond to their pastor if he takes a strong stand, say, on fair housing. It won't be pleasant and the strain soon separates the bigots from the believers. But, generally, the congregation will take it if he doesn't call for getting rid of the choir director or the burning of draft cards. These other issues may be just as important to him but he wisely learns to pace himself, like the dentist, who drills and then cools.

This is what is happening to Bishop Pike. His interest, concern and involvement in so many social-religious-ethical debates has brought him to the credibility gap with his friends and the public.

Being a person of such unusual charm and such a towering intellect, the public seems to have given Pike at least three or four issues to employ. So he has had some pretty thrilling times as the front runner on things like reform of abortion laws, the New Morality, birth control, the experimental use of drugs and better understanding for homosexuals. When time permitted, he also reworked the creeds of his church, discussed the death of God and outlined new moves for peace in Vietnam. But then my Wilt Chamberlain theory came into practice. To be a professional in one area does not mean expertise in another—say spiritualism.

Every family in the pew and plenty out in the parish have had strong feelings in this field and they didn't need a bishop to straighten them out. Historically, spiritualism is so riddled with fraud, deceit and foolishness that Pike added nothing new to their knowledge except a suspicion about where he is heading. What next, they are asking?

The true Renaissance man was gifted in art, music and theater, and enjoyed one more quality—when to stop and reflect on his work.

PEACE CANDIDATE challenger to President Johnson may be entered in next year's Democratic primaries in the person of Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota. In the late 1940s, fire losses (exclusive of forest fires) came to more than 3 per cent of the U.S. gross national product, according to National Fire Protection Association statistics. The rate has declined to little more than 2 per cent currently, although the total dollar loss is much higher because of the rapid growth of the GNP during the past two decades.

Missouri—America's Exciting Land of Western Lore

Jesse James... Joseph Smith ... Mark Twain—these are just a few of the famous names in American history that are associated with Missouri.

A combination of famous historic landmarks and scenic beauty make Missouri a photographer's paradise, where there's something to snap wherever you turn.

In Liberty, Missouri, the Liberty jail—where the "Mormon Prophet", Joseph Smith was imprisoned during the bitter winter of 1838-39—has been restored by members of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Today it's a hallowed and sacred place to members of the religious order. The cutaway restoration of the jail, including the dungeon, is housed in one of the most beautiful buildings to be found in the state. Untold thousands visit the shrine each year. They come from every state in the Union and many foreign countries.

It was in Liberty, too, that Jesse James and his gang staged history's first daylight bank robbery on February 13, 1866. On a corner of the square is the oldest landmark — the building that housed the bank reputedly robbed on that day.

This statue in St. Joseph, Missouri, commemorates the days of the famous Pony Express, which carried the mails between April 3, 1860 and October 24, 1861.

In "Mark Twain's" home town of Hannibal, Missouri, on the banks of the Mississippi River, a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer stands in tribute to one of the state's most famous citizens.

Recently, a distant cousin of a man killed during the holdup acquired the building and rebuilt it exactly as it was at the time.

North of Liberty, outside the town of Kearny, stands the home of Jesse and Frank James. It still contains much of the original furniture and can be toured for a small fee. On the edge of Kearny, you can see James' grave, where it lies near two giant cedar trees.

The house where the outlaw was killed—on April 5, 1882, by two of his cronies, Bob and Charles Ford—may be visited in St. Joseph, Missouri, and is still furnished as it was on the day of the murder, including the plaque "Home Sweet Home" that James was allegedly in process of hanging on the wall when he was shot.

In St. Joseph, another must-see is The Pony Express Museum, which tells the story of St. Joseph graphically, along with the history of the Pony Express from April 3, 1860 to October 24, 1861.

Samuel Clemens, better known as "Mark Twain," grew up in the Mississippi River town, which has a population of 21,000, has a lighthouse and bridge named for Mark Twain, and a statue of Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer that was erected in tribute to one of America's most famous authors.

Other notable Missourians have included Daniel Boone and General Grant — both owned farms there—and former President Harry S. Truman.

Man's All-Wise Pose Casts Doubts on His Credibility

By DAVID POLING

One of my theories is that leaders in national life are allowed only one or two areas of authority and respect. They might extend their interest to other fields, in rare exceptions be a "renaissance man" and capture several more. But usually you are allowed one or two major lines and that's it.

When Wilt Chamberlain admitted that he was considering the world of professional boxing nobody wrote for tickets. Why? He is Mr. Basketball. His court play, team effort and personal excellence are unsurpassed. Honor and fame and cash have flooded in. But boxing? He was about as welcome as a giraffe at a dog show. He had found and claimed his place in the sports world and in the heart of the fans on the basketball court. He got the message.

Do you recall the news item that appeared before the national political conventions of 1964 stating that, in spite of the rumors, Billy Graham would not consider an invitation to be on a party ticket? It was almost funny. The public has long shown its interest and support of Graham as evangelist and preacher in countless religious meetings and services. But no one beyond Graham's staff had ever allowed that he might run for political office.

The result would be embarrassing to the public and disastrous to the evangelist. One field yes—two, no.

This is true on delicate social issues and the role of a local minister. A congregation or community will respond to their pastor if he takes a strong stand, say, on fair housing. It won't be pleasant and the strain soon separates the bigots from the believers. But, generally, the congregation will take it if he doesn't call for getting rid of the choir director or the burning of draft cards. These other issues may be just as important to him but he wisely learns to pace himself, like the dentist, who drills and then cools.

This is what is happening to Bishop Pike. His interest, concern and involvement in so many social-religious-ethical debates has brought him to the credibility gap with his friends and the public.

Being a person of such unusual charm and such a towering intellect, the public seems to have given Pike at least three or four issues to employ. So he has had some pretty thrilling times as the front runner on things like reform of abortion laws, the New Morality, birth control, the experimental use of drugs and better understanding for homosexuals. When time permitted, he also reworked the creeds of his church, discussed the death of God and outlined new moves for peace in Vietnam. But then my Wilt Chamberlain theory came into practice. To be a professional in one area does not mean expertise in another—say spiritualism.

Every family in the pew and plenty out in the parish have had strong feelings in this field and they didn't need a bishop to straighten them out. Historically, spiritualism is so riddled with fraud, deceit and foolishness that Pike added nothing new to their knowledge except a suspicion about where he is heading. What next, they are asking?

The true Renaissance man was gifted in art, music and theater, and enjoyed one more quality—when to stop and reflect on his work.

Ann Landers

Teen Age Boy Says Girls' Clothes Issue Invitations

Dear Ann Landers: I have had enough of you. I am a 17-year-old boy who thinks your advice to the girl whose steady boyfriend has "wandering hands" is all wet.

Instead of telling the girl to give the eight-handed idiot "a clop in the chops" or however it is you worded it, why don't you put the blame where it belongs -- on the girl?

No guy in his right mind ever starts to paw a perfect lady. The chick who suddenly finds a guy's hands all over her has asked for it in one way or another.

Sometimes it's not in words, it's the way a girl gets herself together. The miniskirts are a pretty good eyeful when a girl is standing up. When she is sitting down, it's like she is wearing a bikini. No normal guy can look at all that flesh and not get ideas.

Transparent blouses and sweaters, and jeans that fit like sausage casings are worn to get guys excited, and when a normal guy gets excited he wants to do more than just look.

So please, Ann Landers, since you are supposed to give advice, give it to the girls. They are the ones who need it -- TIRED OF BEING TURNED ON

Dear Tired: There's a great deal of truth in what you say and I'm glad you took the time to say it. The moral of the story is simply this, girls: Don't let your clothes issue any invitations you don't mean to fulfill. When you turn a guy on, he can be awfully hard to turn off.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a school teacher who feels parents in this country need a better understanding of where we fit into the lives of their children. Will you please help by printing this letter?

1. Teachers generally choose the profession because they care about children.

2. Teachers try to treat all students alike. If a teacher is unusually suspicious of a child, it is because that child has behaved in a way that has caused the teacher to mistrust him.

3. Teachers do not "give" grades. They only record the quality of the work the student has produced.

4. Children with good manners and a record for achievement will be given preferential consideration and special honors and privileges.

5. Teachers grieve almost as much as parents when a student doesn't make the grade. They feel that they have failed the student and it makes them sad because they love all children and want them to succeed. -- SOMEONE WHO CARES IN AUSTIN

Dear Someone: The teachers you describe are the GOOD teachers. Although there are a great many more good teachers than poor ones, you must agree that not every teacher measures up to your lofty standards.

Confidential to Can't Stand The Sight of Them: Why are you so vehement? Are you perhaps unsure of your own masculinity? Your six-page diatribe suggests deep hostility that must be rooted in something closer to you than you care to admit. Talk your feelings out with a professional and rid yourself of this unhealthy hostility.

Give in or lose him. . .when a guy gives you this line, look out! For tips on how to handle the super sex salesman, check Ann Landers. Read her booklet, "Necking And Petting -- What Are The Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers in care of your newspaper, enclosing 50¢ in coin and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

If You Were the Judge

Uncle Must Pay for Nephew's Abstinence

Luke had a good mind for figures while his nephew Rufus had a good eye for them. The result? While Luke amassed a small fortune from business, Rufus amassed a large stable of chorus girls for pleasure.

Disappointed in Rufus's sense of values, Luke cornered Rufus and offered to pay him $10,000 if he'd stop running around with his chorus girls for two years. Short of funds, Rufus readily accepted the offer. Two years later, however, after abstaining from his more pleasurable relationships, Rufus demanded his $10,000 only to have his Uncle Luke ignore his demand.

"But you promised," Rufus protested. "I gave up a whole way of life to get that money."

"If that was living," was Luke's answer, "I'm a cigar store Indian. Besides, a promise isn't binding unless somethink is received in exchange. You never gave me anything in exchange for my promise to pay you $10,000."

Determined to get his hard earned money, Rufus took his Uncle Luke to court.

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make Luke fork over the $10,000 to his ex-playboy nephew?

This is how the judge ruled: Yes! The judge held that giving up a legal right is sufficient exchange to make a promise binding; that since Rufus had a legal right to go out with chorus girls, his refraining; from doing so entitled him to the $10,000.

SCOTT COUNTY Ramblings

by Tom Stroup
Director and Agricultural Agent

BENTON - Livestock men with late calves. . .or those preparing for calves this spring. . .are asking if it is advisable to creep-feed calves in commercial herds.

University of Missouri animal husbandmen list a number of conditions under which creep-feeding is likely to pay.

It is usually profitable to creep feed calves dropped in the fall or early winter. . .even though the cows are well fed through the winter.

When pastures are poor for the cow herd during the suckling period, calves should be creep-fed.

In drouth years, creep-feeding increases weaning weights, when pastures are below normal.

Calves should be creep-fed when there are many first-calf heifers or aged cows in the herd.

It pays to creep-feed when the herd has inherently poor milkers.

Finally, calves should be creep-fed if they are to be sold for slaughter at weights ranging from five to 700 pounds. This is often the most profitable way to market low-quality calves such as those that are part dairy stock.

Of Interest to Homemakers

CHARLESTON -- No one knows for sure, but trends and major developments help forecast things to expect. Become aware of supply and demand and average prices of goods to help you predict what is ahead for you.

Consumers have been buying more things in recent months. Higher prices are expected for 1968.

Some of the causes of an increase are: ways increases that took place during 1967, increased cost of raw materials, and increased profit margins.

Food prices may rise at a faster rate than in 1967. Demand is expected to go up, but supplies may not increase much.

Consumer service costs will likely increase faster than in 1967. Mortgage interest costs are expected to be a little higher. Increases will continue for medical care, personal care, and household services.

Higher clothing costs may be expected. This will be due to increasing costs and continued consumer demand.

Retail prices of appliances, radios and television sets are higher due to increases in factory prices and demand remains strong. Furniture and tires will carry higher price tags due to higher costs at the factory and in distribution. CAR prices, new and used, will rise as much as in 1967.

This new year starts with a liberal supply of plentiful foods according to the marketing experts with USDA's Consumer and Marketing Service.

Broiler-fryers are the featured plentiful. Other foods listed as plentiful include potatoes, fresh oranges, grape juice, fresh grapefruit, dry split peas and eggs.

Ann Landers

Teen Age Boy Says Girls' Clothes Issue Invitations

Dear Ann Landers: I have had enough of you. I am a 17-year-old boy who thinks your advice to the girl whose steady boyfriend has "wandering hands" is all wet.

Instead of telling the girl to give the eight-handed idiot "a clop in the chops" or however it is you worded it, why don't you put the blame where it belongs -- on the girl?

No guy in his right mind ever starts to paw a perfect lady. The chick who suddenly finds a guy's hands all over her has asked for it in one way or another.

Sometimes it's not in words, it's the way a girl gets herself together. The miniskirts are a pretty good eyeful when a girl is standing up. When she is sitting down, it's like she is wearing a bikini. No normal guy can look at all that flesh and not get ideas.

Transparent blouses and sweaters, and jeans that fit like sausage casings are worn to get guys excited, and when a normal guy gets excited he wants to do more than just look.

So please, Ann Landers, since you are supposed to give advice, give it to the girls. They are the ones who need it -- TIRED OF BEING TURNED ON

Dear Tired: There's a great deal of truth in what you say and I'm glad you took the time to say it. The moral of the story is simply this, girls: Don't let your clothes issue any invitations you don't mean to fulfill. When you turn a guy on, he can be awfully hard to turn off.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a school teacher who feels parents in this country need a better understanding of where we fit into the lives of their children. Will you please help by printing this letter?

1. Teachers generally choose the profession because they care about children.

2. Teachers try to treat all students alike. If a teacher is unusually suspicious of a child, it is because that child has behaved in a way that has caused the teacher to mistrust him.

3. Teachers do not "give" grades. They only record the quality of the work the student has produced.

4. Children with good manners and a record for achievement will be given preferential consideration and special honors and privileges.

5. Teachers grieve almost as much as parents when a student doesn't make the grade. They feel that they have failed the student and it makes them sad because they love all children and want them to succeed. -- SOMEONE WHO CARES IN AUSTIN

Dear Someone: The teachers you describe are the GOOD teachers. Although there are a great many more good teachers than poor ones, you must agree that not every teacher measures up to your lofty standards.

Confidential to Can't Stand The Sight of Them: Why are you so vehement? Are you perhaps unsure of your own masculinity? Your six-page diatribe suggests deep hostility that must be rooted in something closer to you than you care to admit. Talk your feelings out with a professional and rid yourself of this unhealthy hostility.

Give in or lose him. . .when a guy gives you this line, look out! For tips on how to handle the super sex salesman, check Ann Landers. Read her booklet, "Necking And Petting -- What Are The Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers in care of your newspaper, enclosing 50¢ in coin and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

If You Were the Judge

Uncle Must Pay for Nephew's Abstinence

Luke had a good mind for figures while his nephew Rufus had a good eye for them. The result? While Luke amassed a small fortune from business, Rufus amassed a large stable of chorus girls for pleasure.

Disappointed in Rufus's sense of values, Luke cornered Rufus and offered to pay him $10,000 if he'd stop running around with his chorus girls for two years. Short of funds, Rufus readily accepted the offer. Two years later, however, after abstaining from his more pleasurable relationships, Rufus demanded his $10,000 only to have his Uncle Luke ignore his demand.

"But you promised," Rufus protested. "I gave up a whole way of life to get that money."

"If that was living," was Luke's answer, "I'm a cigar store Indian. Besides, a promise isn't binding unless somethink is received in exchange. You never gave me anything in exchange for my promise to pay you $10,000."

Determined to get his hard earned money, Rufus took his Uncle Luke to court.

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you make Luke fork over the $10,000 to his ex-playboy nephew?

This is how the judge ruled: Yes! The judge held that giving up a legal right is sufficient exchange to make a promise binding; that since Rufus had a legal right to go out with chorus girls, his refraining from doing so entitled him to the $10,000.

A motorist may not blindly insist upon his right of way. He must use his senses to avoid injury to himself or another. When you approach an intersection with the right of way, you must still exercise care.

SCOTT COUNTY Ramblings

by Tom Stroup
Director and Agricultural Agent

BENTON - Livestock men with late calves. . .or those preparing for calves this spring. . .are asking if it is advisable to creep-feed calves in commercial herds.

University of Missouri animal husbandmen list a number of conditions under which creep-feeding is likely to pay.

It is usually profitable to creep feed calves dropped in the fall or early winter. . .even though the cows are well fed through the winter.

When pastures are poor for the cow herd during the suckling period, calves should be creep-fed.

In drouth years, creep-feeding increases weaning weights, when pastures are below normal.

Calves should be creep-fed when there are many first-calf heifers or aged cows in the herd.

It pays to creep-feed when the herd has inherently poor milkers.

Finally, calves should be creep-fed if they are to be sold for slaughter at weights ranging from five to 700 pounds. This is often the most profitable way to market low-quality calves such as those that are part dairy stock.

Of Interest to Homemakers

CHARLESTON -- No one knows for sure, but trends and major developments help forecast things to expect. Become aware of supply and demand and average prices of goods to help you predict what is ahead for you.

Consumers have been buying more things in recent months. Higher prices are expected for 1968.

Some of the causes of an increase are: ways increases that took place during 1967, increased cost of raw materials, and increased profit margins.

Food prices may rise at a faster rate than in 1967. Demand is expected to go up, but supplies may not increase much.

Consumer service costs will likely increase faster than in 1967. Mortgage interest costs are expected to be a little higher. Increases will continue for medical care, personal care, and household services.

Higher clothing costs may be expected. This will be due to increasing costs and continued consumer demand.

Retail prices of appliances, radios and television sets are higher due to increases in factory prices and demand remains strong. Furniture and tires will carry higher price tags due to higher costs at the factory and in distribution. CAR prices, new and used, will rise as much as in 1967.

Cotton Soybean Clinic in Kennett

KENNETT - The competitive challenge facing U.S. cotton was never greater. And there is no end in sight to the relentless competition from synthetics and foreign grown cottons. Cotton can better meet this challenge by reducing costs.

How to reduce these costs and increase profits will be one of many topics that farmers in the Kennett area will hear discussed at a cotton-soybean clinic in Kennett next Friday. The clinic will be held from 9:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the American Legion Community building.

Farming experts from the top companies in agriculture will appear here in one of only nine such clinics being held in 1968 in a five-state Mid-South area. This panel will discuss the most modern farming techniques known, and five examples of their succussful use in building extra profits of $20 an acre and more for top farmers.

In addition to the production tips, this clinic program contains other pleasant features. Free coffee and doughnuts will be served from 8:30 to 9:15 a.m. for farmers arriving early for the clinic. One of these early arrivers will take home a 12-gauge shotgun from the early-bird give-away. A hot noon meal will also be served at the expense of the clinic sponsors, who are Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, Amchen Products, Inc., Behlen Manufacturing Co. and Shell Chemical Co.

At the end of the final itme on the program - a question and answer period with the panel of experts, one lucky farmer will win a portable television set as a dore prize.

Jury Convicts Man of Theft

CHARLESTON-A circuit court jury convicted Melvin Curtis Hedge of burglary and stealing in a July breakin at the Monsanto Ag Center east of Charleston.

The jury deliberated about an hour before returning the guilty verdict at 5:30 p.m. Judge Marshall Craig gave Hedge 30 days in which to file a motion for a new trial.

Evidence introduced by prosecuting attorney Rod Ashby showed that a base station radio was removed from the center office and was found beside the county road in front of the office.

Hedge's car, with his wife in it, was found about a quarter mile down the road by police and highway patrolmen, who were called to the scene by Barney Reeves, who had noticed unusual activity around the office building. Hedge was later apprehended at the home of his mother-in-law.

Fingerprints on the radio were identified by a highway patrol expert as those of Hedge.

Cotton Soybean Clinic in Kennett

KENNETT - The competitive challenge facing U.S. cotton was never greater. And there is no end in sight to the relentless competition from synthetics and foreign grown cottons. Cotton can better meet this challenge by reducing costs.

How to reduce these costs and increase profits will be one of many topics that farmers in the Kennett area will hear discussed at a cotton-soybean clinic in Kennett next Friday. The clinic will be held from 9:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the American Legion Community building.

Farming experts from the top companies in agriculture will appear here in one of only nine such clinics being held in 1968 in a five-state Mid-South area. This panel will discuss the most modern farming techniques known, and five examples of their successful use in building extra profits of $20 an acre and more for top farmers.

In addition to the production tips, this clinic program contains other pleasant features. Free coffee and doughnuts will be served from 8:30 to 9:15 a.m. for farmers arriving early for the clinic. One of these early arrivers will take home a 12-gauge shotgun from the early-bird give-away. A hot noon meal will also be served at the expense of the clinic sponsors, who are Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, Amchen Products, Inc., Behlen Manufacturing Co. and Shell Chemical Co.

At the end of the final itme on the program - a question and answer period with the panel of experts, one lucky farmer will win a portable television set as a dore prize.

Jury Convicts Man of Theft

CHARLESTON-A circuit court jury convicted Melvin Curtis Hedge of burglary and stealing in a July breakin at the Monsanto Ag Center east of Charleston.

The jury deliberated about an hour before returning the guilty verdict at 5:30 p.m. Judge Marshall Craig gave Hedge 30 days in which to file a motion for a new trial.

Evidence introduced by prosecuting attorney Rod Ashby showed that a base station radio was removed from the center office and was found beside the county road in front of the office.

Hedge's car, with his wife in it, was found about a quarter mile down the road by police and highway patrolmen, who were called to the scene by Barney Reeves, who had noticed unusual activity around the office building. Hedge was later apprehended at the home of his mother-in-law.

Fingerprints on the radio were identified by a highway patrol expert as those of Hedge.
